

Learning Comes to Life at Principia School

There's a simple wisdom at the heart of Principia School's approach to experiential learning. As director of stewardship, partnership and impact, Lynn Scott puts it, "When you know about it, you care about it. And when you care about it, you care for it." That is the Principia difference.

Across Principia's 360-acre campus, alive with forests, creeks, ponds, and prairies, students journey beyond textbooks into the vast natural world around them, where a living laboratory awaits just outside the classroom door.

Through hands-on learning—studying migration patterns, vital ecosystems, and the biodiversity of the campus—students become critical thinkers and problem solvers with a deep understanding and respect for the interconnected world around them.

From butterflies to beehives and gardens to greenhouses, Principia students are inspired to discover, learning that they themselves can be the changemakers the world needs.
