Arrupe Jesuit is Preparing Students for College, Careers, and the Future

National recognition for Arrupe Jesuit's innovative approach to education

Every Arrupe Jesuit student participates in the Corporate Work Study Program, connecting classroom learning with real-world professional experience.

When Forbes highlighted schools preparing the next generation of leaders, Arrupe Jesuit High School was recognized for its innovative approach to education. The article explores how schools can equip students with the academic foundation, professional skills, and confidence they need to succeed in a rapidly changing world.

As Colorado's only Cristo Rey school, Arrupe Jesuit combines a rigorous college preparatory education with a unique Corporate Work Study Program. Students work one day each week in professional settings throughout the Denver metro area, gaining real-world experience while helping offset the cost of their education.

This national recognition reflects what our students, families, educators, and corporate partners see every day: when young people are given opportunity, support, and high expectations, they are prepared to lead wherever life takes them.

"The Corporate Work Study Program provides students with an opportunity to experience a version of the future that they did not know existed, offering a powerful reminder to young people that their future holds untold promise."

— Michael O'Hagan, President Arrupe Jesuit High School
