

1869

The second railroad car after the engine was often the mail car. While trains rushed by, mail would be picked up and dropped off, often without the train even slowing down. Mail clerks sorted letters on the speeding train.