

We Are Wranglers and We Are Awesome!
REACH FOR THE STARS
January 4, 2019

Did you know...

we are almost halfway through the school year? The second term ends on Thursday, January 10th and we will follow the early-out schedule. School will not be in session on Friday, January 11th so teachers can receive training from a nationally recognized behavior specialist, Dr. Jessica Minehan. SMART Reports and IEP progress reports will be sent home Friday, January 25. Look for information soon about signing up for an ILP Conference on January 30th or 31st. Conferences will be a great opportunity to celebrate learning from the first half of the school year and set goals for the second half.

Utah's New Accountability Report

The Utah State Board of Education on Thursday released its latest online accountability report for public schools. "It is my hope that parents will take the opportunity this year to look more deeply into their child's school performance," State Superintendent of Public Instruction Sydnee Dickson said in a statement. "The comprehensive data that will now be publicly available offers a clearer picture of school progress and achievement in core subjects and advanced coursework." Unlike previous state school report cards, this year's version has no letter grades. That practice has been temporarily suspended as the board implements new statewide testing and a revised school accountability system approved by the Utah Legislature in 2017. The system includes new indicators such as progress of English language learners and academic growth of a school's lowest-performing students. Instead of letter grades, school performance is reported on a scale: exemplary, commendable, typical, developing and critical needs. The indicator ratings capture academic proficiency and growth in core subjects. The report card also includes each school's testing participation rate and the percentage of students who consistently attend the school. The latter counts only students who remain in a single school for at least 160 of the 180-day school year and are in school attendance at least 90 percent of the time.
