NCAA – DIVISION I, II, OR III?

Division I

Division I schools generally have more students, larger athletics budgets and more athletics department support than schools in Division II or III.

Division II

Schools in Division II emphasize a life balance in which academically and athletically gifted students can compete at a high level,

wh
co

Division III

Academics are the primary focus for Division III student-athletes who experience shorter sports seasons, reducing their time away from academic studies and other campus activities.

CLUB AND INTRAMURAL SPORTS

Students who are not competing at the Varsity level, and/or don't want the intensity of varsity-level sports, can join clubs and intramural leagues. Millions of college students take part in these teams each year as a way to compete, have fun and stay fit.

Club Sports

Club teams compete against clubs from other colleges, and they are run by students. Students take charge of everything from getting uniforms to hiring officials to making travel arrangements. Competition and time commitments can be intense for club sports — teams may be involved in a regional conference and play for a national championship.

Intramural Sports

Intramural leagues are set up by the college to give all students a chance to participate. Teams from the same college play against each other.

Students can often participate in traditional sports, such as basketball, soccer and softball, and can sometimes compete in other activities, such as dodgeball, inner-tube water polo or video games. Some colleges offer these types of sports at different levels, so students can match their skills and interest level by choosing a more- or less-competitive team.
