

Fifty years ago, the story of Capitol Hill Day School began with this original vision statement:

“a quality education, a racially and economically diverse student body, a parent-governed school, and a relationship with the surrounding community and the city of Washington”

Throughout our School’s history, the arc of our narrative has remained true to this original vision.

Without question, we stand on the broad shoulders of those who have come before us, and our mission, nurtured over the years by our community, is as relevant today as it has ever been.

Capitol Hill Day School deeply engages a diverse community of students in connecting the classroom to the larger world, supporting each child in developing the confidence, compassion, and intellectual capacity to live a life of purpose and value.

We take deep pride in the Capitol Hill Day School community and our teaching and learning environment. We are steadfastly committed to giving children voice and teaching them to be critical, compassionate thinkers, doers, and advocates for others. Year in and year out, I am in awe of our talented and passionate faculty and staff, our curious and spirited students, and our devoted and enthusiastic families.

As we look to the future, I am excited for all that lies ahead. Working together with dedicated educators and committed families, and guided by our mission, we must continue the vital work of helping children learn to explore, engage, and connect with the larger world, and go on to lead lives of purpose and value.

Capitol Hill Day School has clearly benefited from the tremendous stewardship of the past fifty years. Now, it is our turn to ensure that Capitol Hill Day School remains an integral part of this community well into the next fifty years, and beyond.

R. Jason Gray

R. Jason Gray
Head of School