1:1 Technology at MIS

The 1:1 program with Chromebooks is successfully underway. The teachers and students are excited for the increased availability of technology in the classroom which is allowing for greater differentiation.

Teachers are able to provide immediate feedback to students through Google Docs and Google Slides. These programs update live and allow multiple students to collaborate on projects at the same time. Also while using Google programs students learn to provide constructive feedback through the peer editing process.

Teachers are also using a wide variety of online resources to differentiate in their classrooms through the use of the following programs... and many more:

Khan Academy: a set of online tools that help educate students through short lessons in the form of videos. It also includes supplementary practice exercises and materials for educators.

Learning Ally: helps struggling readers through audio books and support services for educators, parents and students.

Read Theory: a fun, interactive educational tool for reading to use in school or at home.

Freckle: helps K-12 teachers differentiate instruction and reach every student at their own level across Math, ELA, Social Studies and Science.

Zearn: a nonprofit curriculum publisher and software developer on a mission to ensure all children love learning math.

We can't wait to see what other creative ways teachers and students are going to utilize this new technology!
