Parent Tips for Homecoming

Don't be afraid to be the bad guy. Taking a tough stand on alcohol use can help youth say no when they are pressured to drink with their friends.

Discuss expectations about alcohol with your teen. Studies show that teens are far less likely to drink if parents make a clear statement that drinking alcohol is unacceptable.

Stay home if a teen is hosting a party in your home. Observe the activities and confiscate any alcohol that may be brought by party goers.

Get to know your teen's friends and their parents. If you know your teen is attending a party after Homecoming, contact the host's parents. Don't be afraid to ask questions about alcohol in the house.

Offer to drive or get a limo for homecoming. Not only will you prevent your teen from getting in the car with an intoxicated driver, but it will also take away other risky behavior, including distracted driving.

Be available. Let your teen know that you are available by text or phone call at any point in the night if they need to be picked up.
