

To members of the Austin Seminary Community

Friends all:

As the COVID-19 virus continues to spread and has transgressed its initial boundaries of containment to become a matter of global concern; I write to let you know what Austin Seminary is and will be doing to protect our campus from its impact. At this time, there are no confirmed cases in Austin, but we are paying close attention to the news, the CDC, the World Health Organization, and the Austin City guidelines, as well as noting what decisions are being made by The University of Texas and Austin ISD. This is a fluid situation and we encourage you to refer to this page for the latest information on our particular response.

First of all, there is, as of today, no evidence of COVID-19 on our campus.

Secondly, we are striving to ensure your physical safety across the season of time in which this virus is running its course.

What follows is greater detail about various relevant matters regarding the whole of our life together on this campus. Please read all of this carefully and observe the various guidelines and information for the sake of your own safety and that of others. I invite you to hold in your prayers all those around the world already suffering from COVID-19, all those who care for them, all health workers, and all who are afraid in these days.

Faithfully yours,
- Ted

Theodore J. Wardlaw, President of Austin Seminary