Dear Partners in Learning,

As we enjoy some frosted cookies, and share sweet notes with all of our friends for Valentines Day, it is important to remember how much our kiddos need to know that we love them. The late Virginia Satir, a therapist and author known for her work with family-centred therapy and self-esteem, said, "We need four hugs a day for survival. We need eight hugs a day for maintenance. We need 12 hugs a day for growth." Physical touch has a way of making us more connected to each other and can help us feel healthier. Kids love when the people that love them leave them unexpected notes, send them cards in the mail and let them know they are forgiven when they make a mistake. Teachers, staff, and myself, love our Emperor Eagles! To remind them that they are loved today and everyday, we hope they enjoy this short reading of the book, Love, by Sesame Street, read by our staff. <https://youtu.be/hdxKxIjYpws>

African American History Month
Thanks to our amazing library staff, the students so many choices when learning more about African Americans who have done great things for our country. You can also learn more at: <https://youtu.be/lz39fg7v7k>
