Writing: Look at your personification chart from Friday to remind yourself what personification is. When you finish, create a poem on the Poetry document that is in your Language Arts Classroom and try to use personification. This is the same document you used last week. Use your heart map or the poetry packet for inspiration. I have attached a sample personification poem on the Google Classroom. I wrote the poem to give you ideas. Check it out in our Sixth Grade Homework and Announcements classroom.

Social Studies: Today you will start to work on your Google Slideshow. Before you begin, read over all your notes and think about how you can group your information together to help you organize your slides. Remember each slide should have a heading, and the information on that slide should all be related to the heading. All information needs to be written in complete sentences. Look at the slideshow directions that are listed on the Ancient Greece Project Directions sheet. You can find the directions sheet on the Sixth Grade Homework and Announcements Google Classroom or your Language Arts Google Classroom. Click on your 'waffle' on the right side of your screen and go to 'Slides' to create your slideshow. Try to complete your first three slides today.

PE: Try to spend 30-60 minutes being active...Go for a bike ride, take a walk, go for a jog, play a game of basketball or frisbee, or any other favorite physical activity! Here are some links that you can use for PE indoors.

Today we will be hosting office hours this afternoon on Zoom! Please click on the links provided on the Sixth Grade Homework and Announcements Classroom to join your teachers.

Writing: Mrs. Rubbo and Mrs. Wickham's classes: For poetry today, please read the "Listen Children" poem by Lucille Clifton (You have a copy of it in your folder). Read the poem two times through without doing anything. Then read a third time and use the Annotating Poetry half sheet that is in your folder. Follow the directions and write the annotation marks on the poem. Don't forget to write out important thoughts and meaning of the poem in the margins.

Mrs. Clevenger's class: For poetry today, please read the "Listen Children" poem by Lucille Clifton (Please see the copy in our Sixth Grade Homework and Announcements Google Classroom). Using a piece of binder paper, recopy the poem exactly as it looks. Read the poem two times through without doing anything. Then read a third time and use the Annotating Poetry half sheet that is in your folder. Follow the directions and write the annotation marks on the poem. Don't forget to write out important thoughts and meaning of the poem in the margins.

Social Studies: Continue to work on your Google Slideshow. Look back at the slideshow directions that are listed on the Ancient Greece Project Directions sheet to make sure that you are completing your slideshow correctly. Click on your 'waffle' and go to 'Slides' to continue working on your slideshow. Try to complete two or three more slides today.

Watch the March 27 episode once through. Then, watch it again while taking dash fact notes in your history notebook or on a piece of binder paper on the segments: "Jobs" and "Central America."

At the end, please do your line of learning...This must be three or more sentences.

Reading:

Read your "just right" independent reading book for 30 minutes. Fill out your NEW reading log and complete one jot using one of the frames from your reading notebooks. You will only have a "Home" reading for today, so only fill out one slot on your reading log and complete one jot. Please put your old reading log in your folder. We will collect it with all of your poetry pages upon return to school.

Today we will be hosting office hours this afternoon on Zoom! Please click on the links provided on the Sixth Grade Homework and Announcements Classroom to join your teachers.

Writing: A "tool" that gives a poem rhythm and music is Onomatopoeia. Onomatopoeia is a figure of speech in which words are used to imitate sounds. It creates a sound effect that mimics the thing described, making the description more expressive and interesting.

For example: buzz, hiss, zing, clippety-clop, pop, splat, thump, sizzle

Look at the attached sample poem using onomatopoeia below:

<https://i.pinimg.com/originals/8d/7a/ac/8d7aacea5a4e745ffb0b6bd7a4e668e9.jpg>

You now have even more 'tools' you can try out in your own poetry...repetition, similes, metaphors, personification, and onomatopoeia. When you finish, create a poem on the Poetry Document that is in your Language Arts Classroom and try to use onomatopoeia and at least one other tool. Use your heartmap or packet of poetry for inspiration.

Social Studies: Continue to work on your Google Slideshow. Refer back to the slideshow directions that are listed on the Ancient Greece Project Directions sheet. Click on your 'waffle' and go to 'Slides' to continue working on your slideshow. Try to complete two or three more slides today.

Writing: Another "tool" that gives a poem rhythm and music is Alliteration. Alliteration is repetition of the same or similar sounds at the beginning of words.

For example: She sells seashells by the seashore.

You now have even more 'tools' you can try out in your own poetry...repetition, similes, metaphors, personification, onomatopoeia, and alliteration. When you finish, create a poem on the poetry document that is in your Language Arts Classroom and try to use alliteration. Use your heartmap or packet of poetry for inspiration. I have attached a sample alliteration poem below to give you ideas.

Social Studies: Finish your Google Slideshow and make sure to share it with your history teacher. Your slideshow should have a total of eight to ten slides. Refer back to the slideshow directions that are listed on the Ancient Greece Project Directions sheet to make sure that you completed it correctly. If Mrs. Rubbo is your history teacher, share it by clicking on the 'share' button and the top right corner and then typing her email rubboj@mhusd.org . If Mrs. Clevenger is your history teacher, share it by clicking on the 'share' button and the top right corner and then typing her email clevengert@mhusd.org. Also, go back and hit the TURN IN button on your Ancient Greece notes.
