

HUNTER GATHERER MENU

Purpose

Students will do some research on foraging diets and how our foraging ancestors might have used a variety of tools to hunt and gather. They have to choose menu items that a typical forager might have hunted and gathered in the location they specify. This activity will allow students to learn about the variety of different food items available in certain areas and how early foragers would have procured these items.

Process

Students will begin this activity by choosing a name and location for their imaginary restaurant along with a date to correspond to when people would have been foraging in their location. They then have to research what a typical forager might have hunted and gathered in their geographical region in order to put together their menu. Students must include information on the tools used to forage that particular food item as well as information about where the food item was located.

Directions: Choose a name, location, and date for your imaginary restaurant. Using the information you’ve found during your research, put together a menu based on what a typical forager might have been able to find or catch at the time and region you’ve chosen. You must include information on the tools used to forage that particular food item as well as information about where the food item was located.
