HUMAN SERVICES PATHWAY

SAMPLE FOCUS: Teaching

<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	Dual College Credit opportunities
<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	Industry Certification opportunities

Because of Washington's teacher shortage there is increased need and support for early teacher preparation, support, and retention. Learn the fundamentals of the education system and practice lesson-planning, instructional best-practices, and classroom management while still in high school. Delve into cultural competencies and discover the impact that culturally responsive teaching can bring to a community.

After High School Options

Employment – Students in the Teacher Academy program prepare for the Para Educator Exam in order to earn a Para Educator certification upon high school graduation. With this certification, graduates are eligible for employment in Washington public schools.

College/University – If you plan to teach in a school environment, a 4-year degree and teaching certificate are required. Be sure to take college entrance requirements into account (such as 2 World Language credits and 4 years of math). Get a head start on earning college credits by taking dual credit courses such as AP/IB courses and Teacher Academy.

Military – Knowledge learned in Human Services related courses applies directly to working as part of any armed services team. In addition, teaching-related skills can be put to use in a military career as a Training Specialist.
