

At the G&T conference at The British School, New Delhi we aim to provide whole group learning situations, smaller collaborative seminars and individual consultation time with experts in specialist areas. Our aim is to provide a diverse and rich experience of the layered elements of Gifted Education and for you to leave with a clear vision for your school.

We are fortunate to have Dr Joseph Renzulli as a keynote speaker and workshop leader presenting live and interactively online. Dr Renzulli has been the Director of the National Research Center on the Gifted and Talented for the past 21 years. He is a distinguished Professor of educational psychology at the University of Connecticut. His most notable accolade is the Harold W McGraw, Jr. Award for Innovation In Education, considered by many to be “the Nobel” for educators. Dr Renzulli will focus on developing creative productivity and an investigative mind-set in his online address.

Dr Adam Boddison will be travelling from England to join us. He has held a number of senior education roles including Director of the Centre for Professional Education at the University of Warwick, Academic Principal for IGGY (an educational social network for gifted teenagers) and West Midlands Area Coordinator for the Further Mathematics Support Programme. Adam is a Fellow of the RSA and a member of the European Council for High Ability. He is interested in how technology can enhance teaching and learning and in recent years he has particularly focused on video conferencing and other media-rich technology. He will be discussing Dual and Multiple Exceptionality students with a focus on balancing the SEN and G&T needs.

Wendy Stewart will be travelling from Australia to join us. She is the founder and principal consultant of Gifted Advocacy and Counselling Services. Wendy has worked in gifted education for twenty years, being one of the longest-serving teachers at the Gifted Education “Chalkface” in South Australia. Wendy has presented at national conferences across Australia as well as international conferences on gifted education. Wendy has been active in supporting and advocating the social, emotional and psychological needs of gifted students in South Australia, where she was President of GTCASA for eight and a half years. She was also a longstanding committee member of the Australian Association for the Education of Gifted and Talented. Wendy will share her expertise and practical experiences related to counselling G&T students.
