CROZET STUDENT NEEDS YOUR HELP TO TELL THE STORY OF A WORLD WAR II SILENT HERO®

CROZET, VIRGINIA—Virginia Peng is truly making the most of this Veterans Day. A student at Western Albemarle High School, Peng and her teacher, Elizabeth Mulcahy, are charged with researching and discovering the untold story of First Lieutenant Bernard C. Harlow, an American service member memorialized at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific in Honolulu, Hawai'i. Their research is part of Sacrifice for Freedom®: World War II in the Pacific Student & Teacher Institute, a cooperative learning program coordinated through National History Day®, and sponsored by Pearl Harbor Aviation Museum, Pacific Fleet Submarine Museum, the USS Missouri Memorial Association, and Pacific Historic Parks.

This institute brings together 16 student-teacher teams from Hawai'i, American Samoa, and the U.S. mainland for a once in a lifetime journey through history. Each team selected a Silent Hero® who died in the Pacific Theater of Operations. They then spend months trying to uncover this brave American's story by conducting research and analyzing primary sources, such as war records, draft cards, maps, letters, and, when possible, family interviews.

In June 2021, the teams will assemble in Honolulu to learn more about their Silent Heroes and the unique role Hawai'i played in World War II. While there, Peng will deliver a eulogy at the Courts of the Missing for First Lieutenant Harlow at the National Memorial Cemetery of the Pacific. To complete this task, Peng asks anyone who knew First Lieutenant Harlow, his brothers (H. Maynard Harlow or James E. Harlow), alumni of the Merriweather Lewis School (1934-1936) or the Jefferson Business School class of 1937, to get in touch with Mrs. Mulcahy at emulcahy@k12albemarle.org.

The 16 teams participating in the 2020 Sacrifice for Freedom®: World War II in the Pacific Student & Teacher Institute represent American Samoa, California, Georgia, Hawai'i, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Applications for the program were submitted by 129 teams from across the country, and the final 16 were selected by a committee of staff members representing National History Day and the sponsoring partner organizations.

It is with appreciation that we recognize the Department of Defense and John and Adrienne Mars for their support of this program.
