

Reethee Antony, PhD, CCC-SLP

Reethee Antony, CCC-SLP received her PhD (Speech-Language-Hearing Sciences) at the Graduate Center, City University of New York (CUNY). She is an Assistant Professor in the Speech-Language Pathology Department at Misericordia University. She holds a Certificate of Clinical Competence from the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association (ASHA) and maintains a state license in speech language pathology in the states of Pennsylvania and New York. Her areas of specialty include neurogenic communication disorders, speech science, neural encoding of speech sounds using cortical evoked potentials, non-native speech perception, and multilingualism. In 2016, she was the recipient of the Martin Gitterman Excellence in Teaching Award at CUNY. She received her bachelor's and master's degrees in Audiology and Speech-Language Pathology from Sri Ramachandra Medical College and Research Institute, Chennai, India.

She has been teaching since Spring 2012 as an Adjunct Professor and has taught concurrently in various universities including Marymount Manhattan College, New York University, St. John's University, and University of Cincinnati (Brooklyn). She has experience teaching a variety of graduate level courses including Aphasia and Neuro-cognitive Disorders, Motor Speech Disorders, Speech Science Instrumentation, Critical Evaluation of Research, Acoustics: Speech Perception and Production, and Advanced Speech Science. She has also taught several undergraduate level courses including Anatomy and Physiology, Research Methods, Introduction to Audiology, Introduction to Communication Sciences and Disorders, Speech and Hearing Science, and Clinical Practicum. She was the recipient of ASHA's Audiology/Hearing Research Travel Award (2012) and Institute on Deafness and other Communication Disorders' Research Mentoring Pair Travel Award (2012). She was also the recipient of the CUNY Science Fellowship (2010), The History and Public Health Award (2013), and The Data Analysis and Visualization Award (2019). At the national level, she serves as the Chief Editor of ASHA's Asian Indian Caucas' Annual Newsletter.