

I am a freshman at North Carolina State University studying Conservation Biology. Currently, my passions lie in field research and science communication, especially wildlife videography. I film, edit, and produce educational wildlife videos for my YouTube channel, The Wild Report, which now has nearly 10,000 subscribers. I am also working to produce video content for the NC Wildlife Resources Commission. Attending West Rowan High School has been one of the key contributors to my success so far, as it provided me with a network of supportive teachers, faculty, and students who were always there to support my educational mission. Once I complete my undergraduate career here at State, I plan to either participate in a graduate school program for wildlife videography or immediately begin work for a network such as NatGeo or Discovery Education if that is an option.
