MMSD and UW–Madison Form Early Literacy & Beyond Task Force Media Availability Discussing Task Force to be held at 1:00 p.m. today

MADISON – Today, Madison Metropolitan School District (MMSD) and the University of Wisconsin–Madison School of Education, announced the formation of a joint Early Literacy and Beyond Task Force which will focus on analyzing the most promising approaches to teaching reading and making recommendations to MMSD and to teacher education programs at UW-Madison toward the goals of improving reading outcomes and reducing achievement gaps.

The task force’s work will be focused on utilizing literacy — at every level — as an equity strategy to ensure all MMSD students receive high-quality, grade level accelerated instruction.

“We are being very intentional about our commitment to early literacy and beyond, and it will be the priority of the district moving forward,” said MMSD Superintendent Dr. Carlton D. Jenkins. “An explicit strategy around early literacy and beyond is an investment – an investment in our children, our families and our community. We know this investment must be sustained over time, and it will also require making an investment in our staff around the teaching of reading.”

The task force is charged with:

- Identifying how literacy, especially early literacy, is currently taught across MMSD and analyzing achievement data for MMSD students with respect to literacy.
- Examining how literacy, especially early literacy, is being taught to teacher education students at UW–Madison’s School of Education and analyzing what these future teachers are currently learning about literacy.
- Reviewing and becoming familiar with the best evidence about the most effective ways to teach literacy in pre-kindergarten through 12th grade — and developing future teachers who can better teach literacy in schools.
- Making recommendations to MMSD and the UW–Madison School of Education about steps to be taken that can strengthen literacy instruction in the Madison Schools and UW-Madison’s teacher education programs.

“We are very pleased to collaborate with MMSD by creating this joint task force that focuses explicitly on what we can do together to improve the reading outcomes of all students,” said School of Education Dean Diana Hess. “The members of the task force are experts in literacy and equity, and I am grateful for their enthusiasm and willingness to commit their time and expertise toward these important goals.”
