RE: Food Allergies

We, here at Harbor, are fortunate to have so many parents and grandparents who wish to help their children celebrate a special event by bringing in food or baked goods.

However, we also have several students in school with significant allergies to nuts. Briefly stated, a nut allergic child who is exposed to nuts by touching or handling, or who ingests nuts or nut products is in danger of experiencing anything from hives to a life-threatening anaphylactic allergic reaction requiring emergency medical intervention.

In an effort to maximize our students' safety, I am requesting that NO NUTS OR NUT PRODUCTS be used in any foods or baked goods brought to school. In addition, since snacks are eaten in a classroom atmosphere, I would further request no peanuts or nut products be given as snack food to your children, or used in craft projects brought to school. Exposure to them could potentially lead to a serious problem for the nut allergic child.

Please feel free to contact me at school with any questions or concerns you might have. I appreciate your understanding and cooperation with this important matter. Our goal is to provide optimum health care and safety for all of our students, which can be accomplished if we all work together.
