

Jill Cowan

Jill Cowan graduated from Wellesley College in 1988. After college, Jill was a management consultant in New York at Jewell Jackson McCabe & Associates and focused on partnerships between corporate and nonprofit entities. Following her time at McCabe & Associates, Jill was Director of Development and Community Outreach for a private hospital in Harlem, North General Hospital. In 2000, Jill and her husband moved to San Francisco to begin a family, and Jill started her own consulting business. Jill has been involved in many nonprofit and social organizations in the Bay Area and focuses on education and community development. She served on the board of Pacific Primary School, where she helped raise capital to fund the school's second major building. At MCDS, she served on various committees, including the Annual Fund Committee. Jill also served on the board of the San Francisco Boys and Girls Club. Currently, Jill is an active member of the San Francisco Chapter of the Links Organization, a women's social organization dedicated to community service, and the San Francisco Chapter of Jack & Jill of America. Jill is also active with the Smithsonian African American Museum and locally with MOAD (Museum of the African Diaspora).
