A Look Around Lakota: E-News Edition

November 2, 2018

Over 200 Lakota students honored 75 veterans as they participated in Honor Flight Tri-State's last flight of the year on Oct. 23.

The morning began bright and early for a group of about 20 Lakota West students, as they headed to CVG airport at 3:30 a.m. in order to welcome the veterans and their guardians to their flight. The event was organized by the school's new club, Patriotic Firebirds. Advisor Kristin Henley explains that the purpose of the group "is to support Firebirds who have joined the military or who are in the process of joining the military, their families and all veterans."

As soon as they arrived at the airport, veterans were welcomed by members of Honor Flight Tri-State's ground crew and three Lakota West students, all of whom will join the military upon graduation. Once inside, the veterans were greeted with cheers from the rest of the Lakota West students.

The cheering and sentiments of thanks continued when the group of veterans returned to Cincinnati in the evening, this time greeted by 180 Lakota East students. Grace Keith, president of the school's Veterans Network club, summed it up well by asking, "Who wouldn't want to come and honor veterans who didn't get a welcome home the first time?"

This is the second year for Lakota East to welcome back an Honor Flight. After greeting a flight last year, the group was invited back again by Honor Flight Tri-State. Plans are already in the works to continue this new tradition next year. "Our faithful Lakota students once again gave us oldsters a renewed hope that gratitude to our heroes will not fade away. We'll save their 'spot' as long as they want to fill it," said Deanna Beineke from Honor Flight Tri-State.

Honor Flight Tri-State is a local organization that offers Honor Flights to veterans of WWII, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. Veterans, along with a family member or chaperone, called a guardian, travel to Washington, D.C. for the day to visit their memorials. The group has been able to provide this trip to over 5,000 veterans.

Jerry Nelson, Americanism Chairman from American Legion Post 681, is grateful for the participation by Lakota students. "I want to thank both Lakota East and West for their contingents to send off and receive back the veterans visiting Washington D.C. We had two members from our post who were on the Honor Flight. The veterans really appreciate those being there!" he said.

Lakota Leads Crosstown Food Drive, but Three Communities Win

The longstanding tradition behind Lakota's annual food drive, hosted by the Lakota Board of Education, helped the district bring home a win in the inaugural match-up against neighboring school districts Mason and Middletown. But the real winners were all three communities that collectively brought in more than 53,000 items for their respective relief organizations.

"We scheduled this year's drive to lead right up to 'National Make a Difference Day' because that's really what it's all about," said Lakota Superintendent Matthew Miller, who secondarily enjoyed the wager he'd made with both Middletown's and Mason's superintendents to wear the spirit wear of the winning district. "The wager was just a fun way of motivating our students and staff to get behind the cause. I'm blown away at the generosity of all three communities."

Lakota accounted for about 41,000 of that grand total, enough to fill about four school buses and amounting to nearly 35,000 pounds of canned goods and other non-perishable items. That stands in comparison to last year's grand total of 27,000 pounds, providing Reach Out Lakota with enough items to stock its shelves through the winter months.

"Between this drive and other smaller ones conducted by individual buildings throughout the year, Lakota staff and families contribute 60 percent of what we give out to families each year," said Reach Out Lakota CEO Peyton Gravely. "The results of this drive never cease to amaze me and we are beyond grateful for their partnership."

Last year, the district put a new spin on the district-wide food drive, which had traditionally pitted East feeder schools up against West feeder schools in a friendly competition to collect the most canned goods. In the spirit of the district's new mantra, "WE are Lakota," the drive was presented more as a team effort.

To further reiterate this approach, the school board went as far as to kick it off at the East versus West football game, which had traditionally marked the conclusion of the drive. Two school buses also hopped around town over the course of the three-week event, making a stop at each school to literally "stuff the bus" with donations.

"This has always been a great event for bringing together all 23 of our schools for a common cause," said Board President Julie Shaffer. "This year was no exception in demonstrating the incredible impact we can make as one big community that cares about their neighbors in need."

Pictured above: The Lakota community collectively stuffed four school buses with about 41,000 items for Reach Out Lakota's shelves. A crosstown wager between Lakota Superintendent Matthew Miller, Mason Superintendent Jonathan Cooper and Middletown Superintendent Marlon Styles left all three sporting Lakota spirit wear after the district posted the highest per student donation amount.

East's Alan Frank Earns Top ACT Score

"WE are Connected"Partners

East's Alan Frank Earns Top ACT Score

Just one-tenth of 1 percent of students who take the ACT test earn the top composite score of 36, and you can add Lakota East senior Alan Frank to that group!

The ACT consists of tests in English, mathematics, reading and science. Each test is scored on a scale of 1-36, and a student's composite score is the average of the four test scores. All major U.S. colleges accept ACT test scores and scores provide colleges with evidence of student readiness for the academic rigors of college coursework.

Thank You to Lakota's 'WE are Connected' Partners

This week, we honor more business partners supporting Lakota students by posting a "WE are Connected" sign in their windows. This sign indicates to Lakota students that they are welcome as customers and that the business offers free WiFi connectivity to support Lakota's continued focus on digital learning.

AROUND LAKOTA

More than 70 local professionals joined the staff and students at Lakota East to share their personal career stories and help students map their futures through the 4Es: Employment, Enrollment, Enlistment & Entrepreneurship.

Lakota East's 4E Day 'Not Your Grandma's Career Day'

For the first time, Lakota East dedicated an entire afternoon to encouraging students to explore the full range of post-graduation options available to them. Called "4E Day," the event tapped into 70-plus local professionals representing career paths involving one or more of the 4Es Lakota promotes to all students: employment, enrollment, enlistment and entrepreneurship.

"This is not your grandma's career day," said East Principal Suzanna Davis in her introduction to the room full of session leaders. "We are working really hard to help our students see the possibilities of both traditional and non-traditional routes that can lead to a career that combines their passions with their skills."

Students had free reign to choose three half-hour sessions that peaked their interest most. Professionals were asked to focus less on their jobs and more on the skills requirements and the individual path they took. It's why topics as far reaching as AmeriCorps, welding, mortuary science, networking and even being your own CEO were included on the full schedule.

"My sincere desire is to help everyone understand that the road available is not a one way street through college or higher education. There are many ways to achieve success and fulfillment in your life after high school," said Brian Miller about his experience as a presenter on behalf of Farmers Insurance. "I have been fortunate in my life. I was guided by many people who mentored and motivated me to see my passion. Helping others is my end goal every day. If we can open one mind, open one door, and provide encouragement, we will ourselves be overcome with blessings."

In a post-event Twitter survey, 76 percent of the student respondents indicated they learned something new about future pathways. Junior Abigail Niehaus said she went into the day with a lot of anxieties about deciding her future and came out feeling a lot more comfortable about her uncertainty.

As someone who has at least narrowed her interests down to something involving design, she found a lot of value in a session hosted by Ohio State University. They presented a rubric that used her interests to generate a range of career possibilities. "It helped me to calm down for one," she laughed. "It also helped me to really look at myself and start with analyzing the things I enjoy doing most."

"Especially with it being our first try, we were excited by the great turnout and the overall success," said East counselor Angie Fisher, who served as the lead coordinator for the event. "We are already planning for ways to make it better next year."

Liberty Junior's 'Hawk's Choice' Offers Over 30 Learning Activities

Advisory period at Liberty Junior School looked a little different last week. Encouraging teacher voice, student voice and student choice were all a part of creating an event called Hawk's Choice.

Students had the opportunity to choose from over 30 different activities that the teachers chose to lead, based on their passions. The idea for Hawk's Choice started with the school's Building Leadership Team's discussions about advisory period. While the team has thought about offering students choices during this time for the last few years, the period was never long enough to build it the way they wanted. "When we decided to block that time and make advisory 70 minutes long, we realized it opened up opportunities," said Assistant Principal Linda Burwinkle. "We talked at length about this being a time that is not tied to a grade and a time we could be creative in how it is spent with students," she continued.

Prior to the school year beginning, administrators asked the teachers, if given the opportunity, what would they teach to students. Burwinkle explained that while many of the teachers had a topic immediately, others weren't as sure. Administrators then looked to the students. After receiving ideas from a student survey, teachers who didn't have a set idea were able to lead a class based on student input.

Students had a wide range of options to choose from for their first Hawk's Choice experience: learning a musical instrument, playing board games, candle making and learning the stock market are just a few examples. LeBron Powell, an eighth-grader, experienced yoga for the first time...and enjoyed it. "It helps your body get fit," he said. Although he's never done yoga before, LeBron said that "everybody was serious about it, but some of it was hard to do if you're not too flexible."

Fellow eighth-grader Erica Cox took part in an escape room challenge - although the students had to unlock a box instead of leaving a room. Working as a team of four, the students had to answer questions to get clues as to how to unlock their box. "They were actually difficult questions," Erica said. "We were excited to open the box because there was candy inside of it!"

Burwinkle said a survey will be sent to both students and staff to capture their thoughts on the first Hawk's Choice, but notes that "the verbal comments have been overwhelmingly positive."

Both LeBron and Erica definitely see the value in the day. "The point was to have fun and come together to do something," said LeBron. Students and staff will have at least four more opportunities to take part in Hawk's Choice this year.

Cherokee sixth-grader Landyn Bomar (pictured left with Principal Valerie Montgomery and teacher Todd Overbeck) was the youngest of six Tri-State students to be honored by the Character Council at its recent "Heroes of Character" awards banquet. Landyn was recognized among his peers at the school's quarterly academic awards assembly.

Cherokee Student One of Only Six Tri-State "Heroes of Character"

The standing ovation Cherokee Elementary sixth-grader Landyn Bomar received from a gymnasium full of his classmates last week demonstrated that his depth of his character went far deeper than the words expressed in a recent nomination letter from his former teacher, Todd Overbeck.

"Landyn helped to create an atmosphere of kindness, tolerance, perseverance and joy that made my entire classroom a better place to be," Overbeck wrote. "These special qualities are difficult to teach to students. However, when there is a classmate who exemplifies these traits every day, his attitude becomes naturally contagious."

Overbeck went on to describe that most days, Landyn is living with a five to seven out of 10 level of pain as a result of his battle against spina bifida. "Through it all, he never complains and always tries his best to be joyful."

Those words helped place Landyn among just six students in the Tri-State honored at the Oct. 25 Heroes of Character Celebration. Hosted by the Character Council, which serves Greater Cincinnati, Northern Kentucky and Southeast Indiana, the event honors youth and adults who consistently demonstrate outstanding character traits in their everyday lives. Landyn was the youngest recipient of all six student honorees.

Before the awards dinner, Cherokee Principal Valerie Montgomery organized a special recognition of Landyn as part of the school's first quarter achievement awards assembly. She knew his classmates would stand behind the nomination for all that they've gained from Landyn, too.

"This young man exemplifies everything I aspire to be with his character, courage, strength and kindness," said Montgomery, who attended the banquet in Lawrenceburg alongside Landyn. "His smile lights up a room and makes Cherokee and the world a better place. He truly embodies everything 'Cheetah Pride' stands for."

What Does It Mean To Be a Lakota Future Ready Teacher?

Last fall when Lakota Local Schools Superintendent, Matthew Miller, signed the Future Ready Pledge, the district's instructional coaches went to work. Using the Future Ready Schools (FRS) Instructional Coaches Framework as a guide, coaches began to learn about the 8 components of the FRS Instructional Coach gear to support personalized learning in all Lakota classrooms.

Instructional coaches Lori Vanover and

Katie Enneking took their learning one step further. They facilitated conversations beginning with Lakota teachers about what it means to be a Future Ready Teacher, and continued this work to include other local school districts during a presentation at the High Aims Summer Institute.

Lakota Instructional Coaches Invited to Write National Future Ready Schools' Blog Post

After Lakota signed the Future Ready Pledge last fall, the district's instructional coaches went to work.

Instructional coaches Lori Vanover and Katie Enneking used the Future Ready Schools (FRS) Instructional Coaches Framework as a guide, but they took their learning one step further. They facilitated conversations with Lakota teachers about what it means to be a Future Ready Teacher, and then continued this work to include other local school districts during a presentation at the High Aims Summer Institute.

"As we worked through the process of defining a Future Ready Teacher, I could see excitement that has since sparked a revolution of change for our students," said Vanover. "Whether in the actual physical classroom environment, the innovative teaching and learning, or finding their own passions, Lakota teachers are moving themselves and their students into the future. As an instructional coach, it is an absolute joy to be a part of their journey.

"The framework has helped guide the support, knowledge and resources provided to our teachers as they expand learning beyond the four walls of the classroom," Vanover added. "This benefits all of Lakota as students increase ownership and have opportunities to become more active in determining their path for learning."

Tom Murray, who heads up the Future Ready Schools effort, asked Vanover and Enneking to share their work on the national Future Ready blog. Here is a link to the blog post.

"I applaud Katie and Lori for embracing the opportunity to bring the Future Ready Framework alive for teachers," said Lakota's Director of Digital Learning Krista Hendenreich. "Future Ready has been key in driving our work around district initiatives and the opportunity for this framework to further impact teacher leadership and the student experience is very exciting!"

Across the district, students celebrated the fall season by carving and weighing pumpkins, counting seeds, and sorting candy. Shown above: Creekside second-graders from Mrs. Muia's and Mrs. Shropshire's classes had a character museum where each student displayed a pumpkin decorated like a character from one of their favorite books. The projects included a study of physical traits as well as character traits.

Cherokee third and fourth-graders are shown here getting ready to run a practice 5K, all in preparation for the Nov. 17 Girls on the Run 5K at Sawyer Point. Many Lakota schools participate in the Girls on the Run 10-week program that inspires girls to recognize their inner strength and celebrate what makes them one of a kind. The program culminates with girls positively impacting their communities through a service project and being physically and emotionally prepared to complete a celebratory 5K event.
