| Experience and Education: | A combination of training and experience which indicates possession of the knowledge, skills and abilities detailed above. A typical qualifying background would include one year of experience cooking, preparing and serving large quantities of food in an institutional kitchen. |
Distinguishing Characteristics: This class is distinguished from the next lower class, Food Services Worker, in that Food Services Workers are chiefly involved in the scouring of pans, washing and drying dishes, assisting in the preparation of meals, and doing other simple cookery in the kitchen. The next higher level, Chef, works under general direction to perform more difficult tasks in the preparation of meals in large quantities and is in charge of an entire small kitchen facility, whereas the Cook is responsible for the preparation of meals on an assigned shift.
