Connections

Once our world lived in harmony,
With all creatures living happily.
A tree stood tall with pride,
Now nothing's here, many have died.
Along came humans, committing crime after crime,
And now we're nearly out of time.
We need to take action, we need to start listening,
The sound of the earth's suffering is deafening.
You can't ignore the clucking of the air,
We need to show the world we care,
Land and sea, earth and air,
Don't wait it any more, don't you dare.

The once calm ocean now roars,
And snags with its vast jaws,
The webs of life connects us all,
It keeps us alive and makes sure we don't fall.
Now you see we can make a change,
By cutting down on our plastic range,
You can help out, no matter what your age,
Let us end this planet's rage.

Maestro (excerpt)

He woke every morning just shy of seven, right as the birds began to sing; anything after would be too late of a rise and would be a waste of his time, but any time prior, before the birds even rose, would be too early for him to work.

Inner Demon

Her eyes. Her teeth. Her hands. Her skin. Her body. Reia Silver hated them. She hated the blood coursing through her veins. She hated the incessant pulse of her heart's throbbing. She hated the way her survival requires things she cannot deny it.
