

RCDS Summer Reading, Students Entering Grade Nine

INCOMING NINTH GRADERS!

We look forward to working with you in the Upper School next year! But first, you'll pursue summer plans that include all kinds of adventure and enjoyment; and you've got some great books to read so that we can jump right into our English work, come September!

The general theme of our work in English 9 is "Journeys to Identity." In our reading we'll explore the lives of characters who seek to define themselves while struggling with a variety of forces that can make that definition difficult... but ultimately rewarding in some way that is important to the individual.

During the summer, you'll read an excellent book and practice annotation as you read that book, The House on Mango Street by Sandra Cisneros

About the Book and Its Author...

The House on Mango Street is a work of fiction, but Cisneros drew upon her own coming-of-age experiences in creating Esperanza Cordero, a young Latina growing up in Chicago. Cisneros presents the story as a series of vignettes, snapshots of Esperanza's experiences (told in the first person by Esperanza). At first, you might ask yourself, "How does the chapter I'm reading now connect to the one I just finished?" Be patient with the book: when you finish, you'll realize that you've seen Esperanza's life as a series of photographs and not as a movie. One of the great rewards of reading Mango Street is your seeing how the pieces for together... for Esperanza and for you as the reader. The House on Mango Street presents a range of colorful characters from Esperanza's neighborhood. You'll enjoy meeting them all!

How should I read this book?

- First of all, we hope you'll enjoy the book! Maintain a focus on the fact that this is, first and foremost, a great story about compelling characters. Of course, Esperanza, the first-person narrator, is one of those compelling characters. Don't forget to think about her as she shares stories of the people she encounters...
- We will be discussing the book in class, and you'll be writing about and/or taking an assessment on it. So, it's important to read actively/closely:
  - o take notes
  - o highlight passages that strike you as important
  - write down questions you might have! Your questions will help your section to get off to a good start in terms of class sharing/discussion!
- Keep "journeys to identity" in mind. Who is Esperanza at the beginning of her adventures? Who does she hope to become/how does she hope to define herself? What obstacles or challenges must she negotiate?
- Keep your own journey in mind, too. Not only will we explore literature connected to identity throughout the year, but you'll talk and write about your own experiences.

Some General Terminology: A Start...

During the year we'll use a number of literary terms as we discuss our books. You know some of these already; some may be new to you. Be prepared to use them even in our first discussions of your summer reading:

- Allusion: a reference usually indirect in one work to a person, place, idea or other work in another
- Antagonist: a character who opposes the protagonist in some way
- Bildungsroman: a coming-of-age story
- Point of View: the perspective from which a story is told
- Plot: simply defined, plot is characters in action

- Protagonist: the central or leading character in a work of literature
- Setting: the time and place in which a story takes place
- Symbol: an object that represents more than its literal self. Symbolism is the use of such objects to emphasize ideas in a work of literature
- Theme: the main idea or meaning of a work of literature. The theme may be stated directly but is often implied
- Tone: the writer's attitude toward/about a character or subject in a work
- Vignette: a scene or sketch that focuses on a single specific moment or incident
