LOGOS SCHOOL

IMPACT REPORT

LOGOS School provides hope and a path to success for struggling students and their families in a safe, ethical environment. Through individualized education and therapy, our students gain acceptance and a promising future.

Since 1970, LOGOS has provided a lifeline for students who need more than a traditional school setting can offer. Our program provides an innovative combination of individualized academics, individual and group therapy, and parental involvement, which has proven successful with more than 2,000 at-risk adolescents over the past 50+ years.

We specialize in working with youth struggling with any number of emotional challenges, including Anxiety, Attachment Disorder, Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, Autism Spectrum Disorder, Bipolar Disorder, Depression, eating disorders, learning challenges, low self-esteem, Obsessive Compulsive Disorder, Oppositional Defiant Disorder, poor motivation, Post Traumatic Stress Disorder, relationship challenges, and school refusal.

DEAR FRIENDS

When we wrapped up the 2020 Legacy of Hope Gala during a time of so much uncertainty, I was walking on air! I believe my heart may have grown about 100 times that night, as well. I was so touched and thrilled by the outpouring of love and generosity and the recognition that LOGOS is truly saving lives. The LOGOS community has responded in so many big and meaningful ways to the two crises we have been facing, one that long predates discovery of a novel coronavirus.

Research findings in 2019 shined a harsh light on the worsening crisis in child and adolescent mental health. It provided a few especially troubling facts related to the increase in teen mental health issues between 2009 and 2017, including the fact that cases of major depression among teens ages 16 and 17 rose by 69%, and the suicide rate among teens ages 18 and 19 increased by 56%. The enormous adversity and disruption of COVID – and I will argue the stress and strife in the world – have only intensified feelings of anxiety, fear, hopelessness, and certainly isolation.

With these realities, how could I be filled with joy and hope? Because I know we are making a difference and there is so much committed belief in the importance of our work. The world now knows what we have known for years: that our kids are struggling. But through an unconventional approach to education and unconditional love and support, we can reach the so-called "unreachable," teach the assumed "unteachable," and give our kids hope for the future.

I'm pleased to bring you this report on the impact of your support during the 2020-2021 school year. You made it possible for LOGOS to continue to adapt during an ever-shifting landscape, add another middle school classroom, meet a significant increase in financial need among our families, implement new programming and student support services, and most exciting of all, hand 26 students their high school diploma! It's always a highlight of the year to see a student gleam with pride when they've accomplished something they never thought possible until finding LOGOS.

In 2022, we're focused on offering this opportunity to as many students as possible, tackling a waiting list that has grown faster in the last two years than ever before. We're also intent on providing education and support outside of our walls through a community speaker series designed to stop the stigma around mental health issues and help parents, teachers, and others navigate the uncertain times our kids are experiencing.

Thank you for believing in this mission, investing in our growth, and enabling us to do the most important, satisfying work we know. There are daily struggles, yes, but when you see a student so low who is lifted by a moment of victory during the day, there is no better reward.

Gratefully yours,

Dr. Kathy Fenger

WHAT OUR KIDS NEED MOST ARE CONNECTIONS AND RELATIONSHIPS WITH THOSE THEY TRUST.

A MATTER OF TRUST

"There was no blueprint for navigating COVID for any of us," says Matt O'Connor, LOGOS Adolescent Therapist and Director of Field Education. "Honestly, we'll be dealing with the fallout – including a more pessimistic view about the future among our kids – for some time."

O'Connor is one of 13 therapists on staff who works with a caseload of 10-12 students on at least a weekly basis, helping them to process feelings and behaviors, establish therapeutic and academic goals, and develop transition plans for when they move on from LOGOS. During the lockdown and quarantines, O'Connor says he and his fellow therapists made regular home visits to students and encouraged teachers to not only focus on academics when checking in with students, but to "see how they're really doing."

Meeting students where they are, physically and emotionally, is the LOGOS way, he says. "We made virtual work where we had to, but it wasn't enough for many of our students. What our kids need most are connections and relationships with those they trust. They are extremely sensitive to the messages they hear and have a greater propensity to experience fear, so we also need to be there to counter with encouragement and messages of hope."

Adolescent Therapist, Victoria Kyles, has observed students behaving much more aggressively about safety, particularly those who lost someone during the pandemic, while others "just want to give up, tired of the masks, quarantines, virtual, all of it," she says. Still, she says, the school and students have done everything they can to maintain a sense of community over the past two years, students even coming up with the idea to create internal appreciation posts for other students and school staff.

"Watching students turn struggles into strengths is one of my greatest rewards," says Kyles. The process can be long for some and is never without its hurdles, the first being establishing trust, she says. "Many students bring trauma and deep pain, they may feel defeated and abandoned, and they have a natural fear of what LOGOS is all about. They have to trust that if they share with me, I'm going to stick."

Kyles says she is transparent with the students about her own struggles and past traumas to help create a connection. "They think, 'If Miss Victoria is going to be honest with me, I should be able to trust her with my feelings.' Then everything unfolds from there."

O'Connor says the most important part of his role is to make students feel seen, understood, and safe. "Our kids see the world in a unique way, often suspicious of and misreading people, feeling inadequate and out of place, and a lot of their behaviors are a reaction to these feelings. When they know I understand them, they will trust me to help them work through their emotions and reflect on 'Why am I so upset in this situation? Am I looking at it through a fear lens?'"

Success, he says, is different for each student. For O'Connor, it's equally gratifying to see students mainstream back into their regular school as it is when they graduate from LOGOS and go on to the workforce or higher education. "I might describe it as shedding their LOGOS training wheels and discovering their balance as they head to their next destination."

EXPANDING OUR SUPPORT

In 2021, we implemented new programs to improve our support services for students, faculty, and staff and reach the wider community with mental health education.

Speakers Series

Launched officially in 2020, we continued opportunities throughout 2021 and into 2022 for the public to participate in a free virtual speakers series. "Through multiple grants, we've been so fortunate to engage with renowned mental health experts and advocates to bring information and strategies to parents, teachers, and administrators dealing with mental health challenges in youth," says Dr. Kathy Fenger, LOGOS Head of School. "As a leader in therapeutic education, it's part of our responsibility to go outside our walls to teach and support others in managing and overcoming mental health issues."

To date, workshops have been provided in navigating the mental health system in America, transforming the stigma of mental health challenges, teaching through a trauma-informed lens, and influencing the adult success of every student.

Health Clinic

"We had this concept for an in-school health clinic even prior to COVID," says Amy Lottes, LOGOS Director of Grant Management. "A lot of our students do not have regular access to healthcare and were missing school and class from unidentified health issues. With our students, it's often difficult to determine 'is it mental or physical?' Our thought was – as it always is – to bring these services to them."

After securing funding, we partnered with iFM Community Medicine to open a free health clinic in the fall of 2021. Twice a month, iFM Nurse Practitioner, Heather Wade, takes appointments with students, as well as staff members, to assess, diagnose, recommend further tests or treatment, provide immunizations, and under the supervision of the iFM Medical Director, write and refill prescriptions. In the intervening days, LOGOS Director of Compliance, Debra Bell, who manages the program, is able to access iFM's telehealth services.

"They can read vitals remotely and if a student has an earache, for example, I have the equipment to look inside their ear while iFM is on a Zoom call looking at the images," says Bell. During quarantines, she says that iFM also provided drive-through testing for COVID and other services. "It's been such a convenience for parents and staff alike, and I know we will see an impact on student outcomes."

Supplemental Food Program

More than 40% of LOGOS families live below the poverty line and struggle with food insecurity. Since 2015, LOGOS has offered our Bright Start Breakfast Program to ensure every student is ready to start the day with the nutrition needed for academic and emotional success. To further help fill the gap, we have teamed up with Operation Food Search to provide take-home kits of shelf-stable food items.

Krystal Stevenson, LOGOS Government and World History Instructor, serves as the Food Outreach Coordinator. She says she can empathize with not having enough to eat, recalling a time early in their marriage when she and her husband struggled financially. "When you're hungry, you can't think about anything else," she says. "This program is really important to our students' ability to focus on their learning and emotional health."

Stevenson continues to work with Operation Food Search to ensure a variety of options and envisions a day when the school may be able offer an in-school market filled with fresh fruits and vegetables. She says that students can access the food kits when they need to, but often will express concern about leaving enough for others. "They are so conscientious about sharing; I love that about them."

LOGOS IS LITERALLY RESCUING KIDS

Tom Kelly

RETIRED LOGOS BOARD MEMBER

It's been nearly 30 years since Tom Kelly was introduced to LOGOS School and the initial impressions are still etched on his mind. "I was so impressed by the model of behavioral therapy combined with personalized instruction. They were literally rescuing kids by providing a place where they had a chance to succeed," says Kelly.

The year was 1993 and Kelly had just moved to St. Louis to take over as President and CEO of Mercy Health Plans. "I was looking for a real nonprofit to get involved with, because I've always believed it's not enough to be part of the business community where you live; you also have an obligation to be part of things that matter." A former colleague was serving on the Board of LOGOS and thought it might be a good fit. Kelly immediately found his niche with LOGOS.

"The school was having good results with students that weren't having success other places," says Kelly. "It was a powerful story; we just needed more people to hear it."

Kelly spent the next decade helping to build out more representation by "big business" and community leaders on the Board, as well as securing new revenue sources. In the late 90s, he served as chairman of a Board he describes as very active and engaged, which even includes a former student. "David (Young, President of The Sound Room and LOGOS alumnus) is very vocal about the fact that his successful business career never would have happened without LOGOS," he says.

During Kelly's tenure on the Board, he found a "special place" on his regular visits to the school and had his first exposure to autism, he says. In 2006, he moved to Phoenix and resigned from the Board. But Kelly continues to be a committed donor. "The people of LOGOS have really hard jobs and make things happen. They're systematically putting kids on track for a better future."

Loans that change lives

Celebrating 10 Years with Kiva

Community service is part of the regular routine for a LOGOS student. Every Friday, LOGOS middle schoolers break out into groups to work on long-term service projects, which are graded as any other class assignment. "We wanted to make this part of their academic curriculum, because it teaches them so many of the skills important to their development – leadership, teamwork, communication, responsibility – and, of course, an expanded worldview," says Deb Elkin, Lead Middle School Instructor. "Our high school students often work independently on their service hours, but I think group collaboration for our middle school students is especially beneficial."

For the past 10 years, LOGOS middle school classes have supported Kiva and were recently recognized as ranking in the 98th percentile of lenders to the international nonprofit. Kiva was created to unlock capital for the unbanked and underserved by crowdfunding loans. Loans can be as little as $25 and 100% of lender dollars go to funding loans, with a 96% repayment rate. Borrowers could be a student needing to pay tuition, a woman starting a business, or a farmer looking to invest in new equipment.

"We love the concept of Kiva, because we're able to have a wide impact with little investment," says Elkin. "And it's more than giving money. Our students are debating the merits of different loans we can choose from, planning activities to raise the funds we're lending – one year we made bracelets to sell – and following the progress of borrowers. It's been very rewarding."

Over 10 years, LOGOS students have made $8,000 in loans to 319 individuals across 71 countries through Kiva.

STUDENT TRANSFORMED

Body, Mind, and Spirit – Through LOGOS

When Carla Skrivan first walked into LOGOS School, she knew it was where her family belonged. "It felt warm, caring, and heartfelt, and Corbin's eyes got big with anticipation," she says.

The quest for a school home for her grandson, Corbin Collins, began about seven years earlier, when he came to live with her and her husband at the age of seven. "Corbin had a lot of trauma when his parents split up, and so Dan and I became his support system," says Skrivan. The emotional issues began to take a toll on his school performance and participation until "he wanted to shut down and had no desire to thrive," she says. "There were many, many days that I'd get a call from his school that Corbin was hiding in the bathroom, upset, and wanting to come home."

Desperate to find a solution, Skrivan had multiple meetings with the school district, the Department of Education, therapists, doctors, anyone that she thought could help. "The reality was that his school district didn't have the resources he needed, so I went looking for it and found LOGOS."

"I was at the lowest point of my life when I came to LOGOS," says Collins. "I was easily over 400 pounds, on a ton of medication, ready to drop out of school. But LOGOS taught me that this is my journey – not anyone else's – and to have self-respect, no matter what I look like or what I bring to the table."

The journey at LOGOS wasn't always easy, says Skrivan, but Corbin received the support he'd been missing. "He got a shoulder to cry on when he needed it, a hug from Kathy (Fenger), and a call from his therapist, Robert (Becker), to talk him into going to school when he had no motivation." When he was having a bad day, she says he would find solace sitting by the fish pond or tending the garden at LOGOS, and he made friends that could relate.

"Corbin started believing in himself and it was like the light went on in his head," she says, adding that instead of enduring school, he would come home excited to talk about his day. In 2021, Collins graduated from LOGOS, 210 pounds lighter, off all medications and ready to go the distance in his next steps, according to Skrivan.

On graduation day, he received an award for his commitment to serving others. "He's always been a helper," she says.

"LOGOS helped me in every aspect of my life, and I see myself going somewhere good," says Collins.

Our 2020 Legacy of Hope Gala celebrated 50 years of LOGOS serving the St. Louis community and, due to COVID restrictions, was our first-ever virtual gala. Our donors, sponsors, community partners, and friends responded to this new format with amazing support! We had more than 350 registered guests from 16 states and raised over $700,000 for the LOGOS mission.

To commemorate our 50th anniversary, we presented our first Legacy of Hope award to Melissa and George Paz, which honors individuals who have built their own legacy through extraordinary commitment to the students and families of LOGOS and to the St. Louis region. The Pazs are dedicated, longtime champions of educational equity and opportunity and a driving force behind LOGOS, guiding us through monumental growth for more than 20 years. The LOGOS School endowment fund supports the mission of LOGOS by providing a steady source of income to supplement the operating budget. For fiscal year 2021, the endowment funded 4% of the school's operating budget.

Over the past eight years, the endowment fund has grown from an initial gift of $25,000 in 2013 to its current level of over $4 million, driven by strong investment returns, generous donor support, and a balanced spending policy. Making a gift to the endowment fund creates a lifetime legacy and ensures more students can benefit from individualized therapy and education. We are grateful for the generosity of LOGOS donors and longtime friends in ensuring this sustained source of support.
