Principal's Message

Parent/Teacher Conferences: Yes, They Are Important for High School Students

As students get older the number of parents attending parent/teacher conferences decreases significantly. However, parents of high school students should not discount the importance of attending conferences. There are many good reasons to attend conferences that ultimately influence a teen's academic success.

Show your child that you care about their education. There is overwhelming evidence that students learn more and do better in school when they know their parents are actively involved in their schooling. Your child may act like they don't want you talking to their teachers, but they do need you and do appreciate you coming.

Improve communication between parents and teachers. Establishing relationships with your child's teachers helps build a mutual bond wrapped around the success of the child. When parents know their child's teachers care, and teachers know that the parents care, a team approach of support is developed. When students know that their teacher and their parent are working together, they put forth greater effort and know they can get help when they struggle.

Learn something new about your child. Parent/teacher conferences can be a time to discuss academic or behavioral issues, or a time for teachers to tell you something new about your child. Often teenagers don't tell their parents what is happening in school, what they are learning, where they are struggling, or new interests they have developed. Your child's teachers see them every day and often have insight to the student's development parents may not see.

Lakewood High School will be holding parent/teacher conferences on November 15th and 19th. You may sign up to meet with all your child's teachers and their counselor. I would recommend meeting with your child's counselor to review pathways to graduation requirements and to start planning for their future. You may find the link to the conference scheduler on our website or copy this link into your web browser.

School Starts at 7:45 a.m.; Learning Starts at 8:00 a.m.

Below is an article found on Monster.com about the importance of punctuality in the workplace. The same reasons apply to school and it develops strong habits for one's future. Arriving to school any later than 7:50 a.m. will make you late for learning which negatively impacts your learning and the learning of others.

7 reasons why punctuality at the workplace is priceless

It doesn't matter how smart, capable and competent you are. If you're habitually late, be it to work or on deadlines, you run the risk of undermining your professional reputation.

Chronic lateness is frowned upon in the Gulf and it was apparent when His Highness Shaikh Mohammad Bin Rashid Al Maktoum, Vice-President and Prime Minister of the UAE and Ruler of Dubai, recently made surprise visits to local government offices. The Shaikh is known for his early-morning excursions to get up to speed firsthand on whether the offices are working up to Dubai's globally-admired standards.

As his office tweeted later: "Timeliness starts at the top and we won't go after employees when their bosses aren't there."

Punctuality isn't a courtesy; it's a must at the workplace. We give you seven reasons for being on time, every time:

It shows that you are a true professional

Most professionals, be they employees or managers, have one thing in common: they make punctuality a priority. This one habit helps you stand out as a reliable and trustworthy person, one who's dependable and can be relied on to deliver on time.

It increases your credibility

You may think your job security is based on your performance but that's not the only thing that matters. Benjamin Franklin said it all when speaking to an employee who was always late but always ready with an excuse: "I have generally found that the man who is good at an excuse is good for nothing else."

It reveals that you respect other people's time

When you are punctual, it reveals that you respect others' time and consider them significant. This trait reflects not just your level of commitment, but also the level of respect that one has for his employers and fellow employees.

It ensures that you are not stressed

Stress is the number one complaint at the workplace and being on time can reduce work-related stress. Constantly being late means rushing and scrambling to catch up with deadlines and pending work. It not just leads to poor workplace performance; it makes your team and superior anxious and uncomfortable.

It enhances your and the team's productivity

Being punctual ensures that you get your project done on time and – in an interdependent work environment, ensures that the rest of the team does their bit in time, too. Miriam Dishon-Berkovits and Meni Koslowsky wrote in their paper, Determinants of Employee Punctuality, that a tardy employee "may have a negative influence on employees who arrive on time, specifically on those who have to 'cover' for him or her."

It makes you synonymous with integrity

In the dog-eat-dog world being punctual singles you out as someone with a plethora of positives. It shows that you're dedicated to the job, interested in your work and keen to take on more. Over time, it also improves your work ethic.

It can help you get ahead

Your performance and skills do matter but punctuality may also help you scale the ladder of career advancement. Diana DeLonzor, author of Never Be

Late Again: 7 Cures for the Punctually Challenged, writes that managers are less likely to promote employees who are perennially late.

A few minutes here and there may not seem like much but in the long run they could add up and affect your job. Majority of the respondents in a York College of Pennsylvania study titled Professionalism in the Workplace said that the best way to get dismissed from a job is to have poor attendance and "a lack of punctuality".

We would do well to remember Shakespeare: Better three hours too soon than a minute too late!

Please Help Keep Our Traffic Moving Quickly and Safely

Thank you to all our drivers who follow the new drop off patterns each and every day. From the feedback given the traffic flow is much smoother this year, with less back up on Robinwood and Franklin. We are very appreciative of those who make everyone's life easier by pulling as far up as possible and waiting to disembark in the drop off zone.

As a reminder the proper traffic drop off area is all the way up the drive past the Civic Auditorium. Please follow the signs and note the yellow striped drop off zone. The further you pull up the more students we can get unloaded at a time. This means there is less traffic back up and the traffic moves much faster. Under no circumstance should students be dropped off on Franklin or in front of the main part of the building.

We are aware that by pulling further up students will need to walk a little further to the main entrance. Students may enter by either the flagpole door or the bookroom door. Students who are dropped off prior to the drop off zone create backup and it sends the message that rules don't need to be followed. Thank you for helping keep our traffic flowing and keeping our students safe by following proper drop off procedures.

SUPERINTENDENT'S MESSAGE

Winter is on its way and with that comes the possibility of school closings due to inclement weather. If schools are closed, parents and guardians will be notified by phone call, email and texts via our Blackboard Connect notification system. Other ways to find out about the schools' status are listening to the local TV and radio stations, checking the District web site at www.lakewoodcityschools.org, Facebook page at www.facebook/lakewoodcityschools.com and/or Twitter account at www.twitter.com/lkwdschools. You can also call the District's School Closing Hotline at 216-227-5708.

I know parents sometimes disagree with the District's decision to keep schools open during harsh weather. If this is the case, parents always have the option to keep their child home. That day will be regarded as an excused absence for the student and students will be allowed to make up any work missed. Please call your child's school absence line to let the school know your child will not be attending due to the weather.

School Counseling Dept. News

Dear Lakewood Students and Families,

The first quarter grading period is behind us already! The LHS Counseling Staff has been encouraging our seniors to have a least one conference with us to review their high school record and discuss post-high school plans. Seniors should be completing college applications and requesting transcripts & recommendations through Naviance by filling out and returning the gold Transcript/Recommendation Request form(s), along with $4.00 per school, to the Counseling Office. These gold forms are located in the School Counseling Office as well as on the School Counseling website. Remember that we have Mrs. Pam Sandoval from College Now as a resource for financial aid questions. She is located in the Counseling Office & available on Tues., Wed. and Thurs.

Mrs. Sandoval, College Now Rep and the School Counselors have already met with juniors and sophomores during their English classes to discuss NAVIANCE and college & career planning. It is never too early to begin planning!

CONGRATULATIONS to our National Merit Commended Students, Timothy Daso, Nicholas Cleary and Andrew Sheldon. These students will be recognized at the Board Meeting on Monday, November 5th.

REMINDER– College and Career Jump Start Night will be presented on Monday, November 12th at 6:30pm in the LHS Cafeteria. You can view the power point on the School Counseling website.

INSTANT DECISION DAY for Cleveland State University is THURSDAY, 11/29/18**

Any potential CSU student must complete the "Apply Now" application on the CSU website by Thursday, 11/29/18. Do not use the Common App for Instant Decision Day. At the end of the application, mark the box that says, "I will mail the application fee." On Instant Decision Day, 11/29, the CSU Rep will provide a waiver when the potential CSU student meets with her. The potential CSU student must schedule a 10-minute spot during the student's lunch period with the Counseling Department prior to 11/29.

A reminder to sophomores and freshman that participating in social and academic extracurricular opportunities can help make the high school experience more rewarding.

On behalf of the LHS Counseling Department, we wish you a very Happy Thanksgiving with hopes that you have gotten off to a great start for a productive and rewarding school year!
