

Cal Q. Leight

Grief stricken, the coach threw himself on the grave and cried bitterly. "My life, how senseless it is. How worthless is everything now that you are gone. If only you hadn't died, if only fate hadn't been so cruel, how different everything would have been."

A clergyman happened by and to soothe the coach he offered a prayer and then said, "I assume the person lying beneath this mound was someone of importance to you." "Importance indeed it was," retorted the coach. "It's my wife's first husband."

My hopes for a terrific season are getting buried. Best I could do last week was 13 out of 19. For the season, I'm 43-25, 63%. Maybe things will change this week.
