Promises made by students from the International School of Nice about changes they will make to ensure a positive impact on the future of our planet are on display in the centre of the Blue Zone at COP26 in Glasgow for the next two weeks. In addition, a film directed by ISN Nice students will play alongside the Globeducate manifesto film.

As a member of Globeducate, one of the world's leading bilingual and international schools groups with more than 55 schools and online programmes in nine countries, ISN Nice benefits from a unique partnership with WWF and the school is committed to becoming an Eco-School.

Over the last two years, as Globeducate schools began working to address the UN Sustainable Development Goals set for 2030, students have taken part in activities with WWF experts, alongside group-wide online summits, debates and a unique Globeducate - WWF Festival of Sustainability.

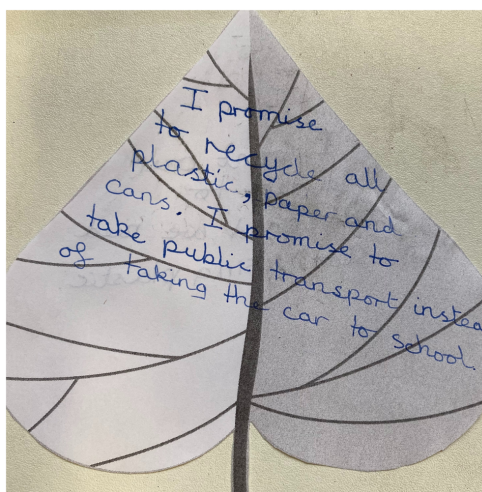

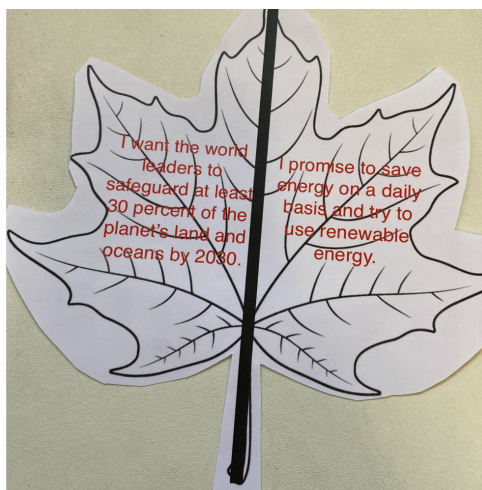

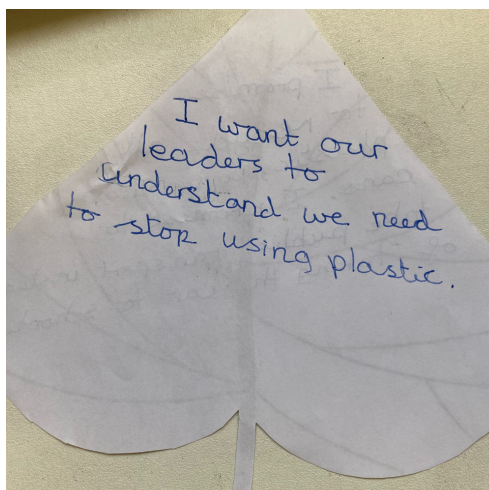

Through this important relationship, ISN Nice students, alongside schools in Spain and Portugal, were invited to contribute “promise leaves” to the WWF Tree of Promises, occupying centre stage in the COP 26 Blue Zone, used for key negotiations, between 31st October to 12th November.

ISN Nice’s Director, Mel Curtis, says:

“A recent global study has found that young people are suffering ‘profound psychological distress’ due to climate change and governments inaction on the crisis. At ISN Nice we are uniquely placed to play an important part in the legacy of COP26. Our students are proud agents of change, and through our innovative academic and extracurricular programmes, they learn how collective action can have an impact, no matter how big or small.

Now is the time to face the truth, listen to young people, and take urgent action against climate change.

These messages of hope from our students are directed at the decision makers of our planet’s future, proof that younger generations can have an impact and shape the world.”
