Proudly Presents:

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE'S

The Comedy of Errors

*Directed by Michelle Posner

*Associate Direction by Darin Frank Earl II

*Produced by Kelly Sullivan King '84

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Shakespeare wrote The Comedy of Errors based on a story everyone already knew and enjoyed retelling. In that spirit, let us set the scene. The twins are from Syracuse and Ephesus, both part of Greece at the time it was written, but now we find ourselves in modern day Turkey during Yacht Week. The setting is meant to evoke the ruins of the Temple of Artemis (goddess of the hunt and Apollo's twin sister), all that remains of the ancient Greek city of Ephesus.

In our play, Egeon arrives in Ephesus only to be arrested and sentenced to death because he is from Syracuse, a country at war with Ephesus. He tells the Duke how he came to Ephesus looking for his family by engaging passersby in an impromptu retelling of his story: Egeon and his wife set sail for Epidamnum with their twin sons and a second set of adopted twins (servants to their own boys). They are shipwrecked during a storm and separated from each other, each with two babies - one of each twin. Both believe they have Antipholus and Dromio in their care.

Egeon raises his boys in Syracuse and when they get older, they go in search of their lost twins. After seven years of waiting for their return, Egeon sets out to find them and bring them home. Unknown to all, Egeon's twins arrive at Ephesus only to find that everyone already knows them because they are being mistaken for their twin counterparts who happen to live in Ephesus. Chaos ensues as everyone mistakes the twins for each other, including the servants who repeatedly mistake their masters and vice versa. The result is that the townspeople think Antipholus and his man, Dromio, are insane and dangerous. They bind the pair and take them away while the unknown imposters hide in the Abby. Eventually, they end up in the same place and the family is reunited.

It has been fantastic to work with this all-female cast and I am proud of the work the students have put into this production. It is always such a pleasure to make theatre with these young women and working on Shakespeare with them, while it has its challenges, has been very rewarding.

We are also very blessed to be able to work with Darin Frank Earl II, a professional Shakespearean actor, who has been an integral part of shaping this production as well as teaching practical techniques and stage combat. He serves as the associate director, as well, and has been an invaluable resource for me.

We are very grateful as a performing arts program to have the support of the administration as well as an incredible producer, Mrs. Kelly King, who is the foundation of our program. The parents are also integral to the success of our show and I cannot thank them enough for all they do to support the students in this endeavor.

All My Best,
Michelle Posner
