

My Pledge to Our Veterans

Veterans are the reason we are here in the world today, from their lifesaving work to their extraordinary determination. Their hearts and minds are constantly centered around us people, so we should not only think about those in our family, but also the veterans who protect us. I believe veterans deserve much more appreciation than the world dedicates to them, so here is my pledge to the veterans.

I pledge to understand what remarkable things veterans have achieved. Whether a great turning point in history or a minimal event, every veteran's actions matter. I promise that I will encourage people to recognize the things veterans undertake because they deserve more attention and recognition than we devote.

Veterans deserve to be known, seen, and heard. Some veterans have lost appendages and come back with healthy minds, some veterans have come back from fighting but have PTSD and other grieving mental issues, and some are still fighting for us. And those who have retired were still a part of these fantastic acts and deserve to be recognized as well.

I pledge deep in my heart to contribute to charities, including veterans, so they can live a life just as customary as our lives. Numerous veterans are homeless and it is heartbreaking to see. So we should stand up, help those veterans who don't have homes, and right the wrongs around us.

Veterans have neverending courage. They have the mental or moral strength to venture, persevere, and withstand danger, fear, or difficulty, but instead of seeing these heroic acts, we sometimes ignore them. Instead of appreciating them every day of the year, many of us only give thanks on Veterans' Day, and even then, many people don't think of it as a big deal. People shouldn't have to tell us to write an extended essay or a letter about how amazing veterans are for us to understand the importance of the lives of veterans.

All in all, I pledge for veterans to have better lives. I guarantee that I will, with all my might, help the veterans in any way possible. They are the heart and soul of our country, and I will try my hardest to get people to realize this. This nation will remain the land of the free only if it is the home of the brave.
