Delaware Valley University Partners with High Schools in the Northeast to Give Students a Head Start on College

Delaware Valley University and Biglerville High School Enter into Articulation Agreement

Delaware Valley University, in Bucks County Pennsylvania, is pleased to announce it has entered into a High School and Career and Technology Center Articulation Agreement with Biglerville High School. The agreement will allow high school students to earn DelVal college credits early. The program will save high school students time and tuition costs if they enroll at DelVal for their bachelor's degrees.

Students from the partner high schools and career and technology schools will choose from flexible course options to earn DelVal credits. The program offers an accelerated path to a bachelor's degree for high-achieving high school students. The agreements will help to facilitate the retention and graduation of students.

"The articulation agreements are a great way for high school students to jump-start their college careers," said DelVal Executive Director of Admission

Thomas W. Speakman. “Participating high school students will also have the flexibility to be involved with more programs at DelVal.”

The University plans to make additional scholarship options available to the students based upon their academic performance in the university-level courses that are offered through the program.

Please distribute this announcement throughout your high school/career and technology center so that teachers can make students aware of this opportunity!
