

TANGERINES

Like oranges, tangerines are members of the citrus family, but they are the fruit of the C. tangerina species.

Tangerines and mandarins are not the same, tangerines are a subgroup of mandarins.

Tangerines were first grown in Palatka, Florida. In the 1800s, they received the name "tangerine" because they were imported through the city of Tangier in Morocco.

Tangerines are soft when ripe.

They are sweeter and less sour than oranges. And much easier to peel!

Tangerines are very good for your health just like an orange!

Both tangerines and oranges can be stored on the countertop at room temperature or in the refrigerator.

Clementine, Mandarin, Satsuma and Tangerine

Remind me again which one am I?

