Evidence from the text or standards relating to EDUCATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE:

The book's milieu effectively lands the reader into a specific world. There is a sense of "felt life." (68) The protagonist's struggles become the search for happiness and identity through the intersection of race, class sexuality and family dynamics (72). The protagonist must confront his father's suicide, his own attempted suicide and sexuality (196, 225). The playful joy of being a teenager merges with the responsibility of emerging adulthood. Teen angst permeates through self doubt (208, 310). Our protagonist succeeds when he understands that the totality of one's experiences and memories are essential to becoming a more realized individual (282)

Evidence from the text relating to QUALITY:

The most impressive qualities of the book include the depiction of fully developed characters; contrasted through friendships and pitted against family dynamics most notably between the protagonist and his mother. Though the characters are often motivated by fear the novel is very loving. We witness the protagonist's mother skillfully navigates parental understanding and support as well as timely interventions (77, 89, 158) Readers are left with an individual who comes to realize time and memories provide him with a range of emotions and experiences to move forward in his life.

Evidence from the text relating to PERVASIVE VULGARITY:

Sexual encounters are noted in the book but not descriptive in nature. These interactions are compatible and necessary to the story's narrative. These events do not lessen the significance of the storyline.
Street language is present throughout the book and accurately reflects the demographic elements of age, race, class and setting.
