

Parent's Right to Know

The No Child Left Behind act provides parents of students to request certain information about the professional qualifications of the classroom teachers who instruct your child.

Specifically you have the right to request the following information about each of your child's classroom teachers:

- Whether the New York State Education Department has licensed or qualified the teacher for the grades and subjects he or she teaches
- Whether the New York State Education Department had decided that the teacher can teach in a classroom without being licensed or qualified under State regulations because of special circumstances
- The teacher's college major
- Whether the teacher has any advanced degrees and the subjects of those degrees
- Whether any paraprofessionals provide services to your child and, if so, their qualifications

Any such request should be direct to:
