Once upon a time China → Liang

long ago China

"I'll show him," Liang muttered angrily as he stomped out of the room.

The next morning, the emperor's messenger made an official announcement.

"His Most Noble Emperor proclaims that whoever gets rid of the dragon will marry his daughter, Princess Peng."

When he heard the announcement, Liang raced to the palace to be the first to sign up. Then he looked for his friend Lee to help him brainstorm ideas for getting rid of the dragon. Unfortunately, Lee was away. Liang sat on a bench frowning. Nearby, children were playing with the toy dragons he had made them.

"Liang, what's wrong?" the children asked.

"I have to get rid of the dragon on the mountain," he told them.

"I have an idea," said little Ling Ling. "Why don't you carve a giant dragon and leave it by the cave? It will alarm the real dragon and scare him into flying away."

Liang stared at her. "Perfect!" he shouted and rushed home. He worked frantically for days making a huge, scary dragon's head. The night he finished, he loaded it onto a cart and went up the mountain. When he...
