Author Spotlight
Meg Cabot

The author of the month is Meg Cabot. Megan (Meg) Patricia Cabot was born on February 1, 1967 in Bloomington, Indiana. As a child, Cabot not only was an avid reader, but at an early age she became obsessed with princesses. In addition to writing for her high school newspaper, Cabot began writing her own stories and kept detailed journals. Cabot, once had aspirations of becoming either an actress or a veterinarian, however her dreams of the latter fell short since her math abilities were quite limited. After graduating from Bloomington High School, she decided to study art history at the University of Indiana. Upon graduating in 1991 with a fine arts degree, she relocated to New York City with the hopes of pursuing a career as an illustrator. This path was diverted when she landed a job as an assistant residence hall director at New York University which not only provided her with an income, but also gave her an opportunity to explore her love of writing.

Cabot's first book, Where Roses Grow Wild, (1998) was penned under the alias, Patricia Cabot. This was just the beginning of Cabot's illustrious career in composing over 80 novels for both adults and Tweens/teens which included multiple #1 New York Times bestsellers which sold over twenty-five million copies worldwide. One of her most popular and commercially successful novels/series was, The Princess Diaries (2000), which was made into two feature films by Disney. Other novel series that Cabot has produced include, The Mediator and The 1-800-WHERE-R-U. In addition to the series novels, Cabot has several separate young adult novels including, All-American Girl (2002), Teen Idol (2004), Size 12 Is Not Fat (2006), and Shadowland (2000)—just to name a few.

Presently, Cabot continues to write and travels between her homes in New York City and Key West, Florida. Both homes are shared with her husband, Ben, and various cats.
