

COLLEGE PLANNING FOR STUDENTS WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

G.W. HEWLETT HIGH SCHOOL

Dear Parent/Guardian:

Transitioning from high school to college is challenging for most anyone, but for a student with a learning disability it can be far more so. Below are a few important points that can help you approach this very important transition period.

1. If your child has been receiving helpful support services during high school (i.e., resource room, ICT instruction or test modifications), it is important that you seek to these similar supports while in college.
2. It is important that your child brings all education related documentation (i.e., IEP, updated psychological) with you when visiting prospective colleges. You will see that depending on your child's needs, some schools may be better choices than others for their continued education.
3. YOU CHILD MUST BE HIS/HER OWN ADVOCATE! If test modifications are needed, it is important to bring this information to the attention each professor.

While little is offered without asking, many colleges have extensive programs designed for students with learning disabilities. But, remember that these programs are as different as the colleges themselves. With this in mind, it is imperative that you visit these programs (schools) and interview them as to the make-up of the learning disability program. You may find that a particular college's program caters to the specific needs of your child more so than that of another school. Additionally, some schools charge for these extra services (i.e., Adelphi), while others, such as Nassau Community College, offer free support service programs.

4. Do not forget to sign release forms to have a ACCESS case opened for your child prior to their starting college. ACCESS offers free vocational counseling for individuals with special needs to assist them in accomplishing their career goals.

Included in this booklet are colleges across the country with services and programs for students with disabilities. It is important to know that colleges vary with accommodations for students with disabilities. Structure programs offer comprehensive support. Also included are a series of articles and documents that offer information concerning a number a college programs designed for students with special needs. In addition, Naviance, the Internet, the school and Hewlett-Woodmere Libraries are also valuable resources to help identify the "right" college to meet specific your needs.

The choices are many, the opportunities are limitless, and the success you can reach is within your grasp as long as you prepare. If you have any questions concerning the transition from high school to college, please contact your guidance counselor.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Ruiz-Quintana
Chairperson of Special Education
