INTRODUCTIONS, PLEASE!

AGENDA

1. Distinguish integrated ENL and co-teaching
2. Explore the rationale behind the integrated ENL service delivery
3. Analyze the four components of the integrated, collaborative instructional cycle: co-planning, co-teaching, co-assessing, and reflection
4. Review and critique 7 co-teaching models through video clips
5. Discuss the implementation of the Integrated ENL within a comprehensive schoolwide framework to enhance equity, and accessible instruction for ELLs

Hattie (2015) on Collaborative Expertise:

- ... the greatest influence on student progression in learning is having highly expert, inspired, and passionate teachers and school leaders working together to maximize the effect of their teaching on all students in their care.
- There is a major role for school leaders: to harness the expertise in their schools and to lead successful transformations.
- There is also a role for the system: to provide the support, time, and resources for this to happen.
- Putting all three of these (teachers, leaders, system) together gets at the heart of collaborative expertise.

Collaborative Practices to Support All Students

Collaborative, inclusive, and integrated service-delivery practices are the best way to serve students who are English language learners.

W

elcome to the collaboration age! or so announced Edutopia lead author Grace Rubenstein (n.d.) in a recent article. She not only designated the current era to be recognized for its dire need for collaboration but also coined a new term to describe the students in the contemporary classrooms: the “collaboration generation.” She pondered how schools teach them, how they learn, and what resources are needed to support them and concluded that the future depends on people’s collaborative agility.

Why Collaboration?

Principals face a tangled web of accountability for several reasons: NCLB shifted the focus of programs for English language learners (ELLs). Success is no longer viewed with the single lens of meeting English proficiency, but rather with a magnifying glass to ensure that students “will meet the same challenging state academic content and student academic achievement standards as all children are expected to meet” (NCLB, 2001, §3102[2]). With the advent of the Common Core State Standards (CCSS, see www.corestandards.org), school leaders must not only guide their faculty and staff members to meet a new framework of standards-based instruction but must also interpret how to meet those standards with ELLs.

Opportunities for Instructional Collaboration

- Curriculum mapping and alignment
- Parallel teaching
- Co-developing instructional material
- Collaborative assessment of student work

- Write the equation for photosynthesis below.
- Circle the reactants and square the products in the chemical reaction above.
- What controls this reaction? Identify the molecules that control the rate of this reaction.
- True or False - Photosynthesis occurs only in autotrophic organisms. Explain your answer: the
- How do leaves contribute to this process of photosynthesis?
- How is glucose used by the plant after it is produced? Why is glucose important for the plant? like you
- How is this process also helpful to heterotrophs such as animals? Why photosynthesis

Humble Inquiry

“What you focus on, you accomplish.”

Craig Gfeller led West Gate Elementary School from one of the lower-performing schools to earning *Prince William County School of Excellence status in just two years.

He fostered a team approach that enabled teachers to help students master required subjects at the same time most were working to learn English as their second language.

Test scores rose dramatically, earning West Gate and Gfeller widespread recognition and a visit from Virginia's Governor.
