November Nutrition Tip: Classic Thanksgiving recipes are like old friends – the ultimate comfort food. Family memories are made sharing Grandma's Green Bean Casserole or Aunt Martha's Scalloped Corn, made irresistibly rich with butter, sour cream, crisp bacon and shredded cheese. Of course, keep those dishes on the table, and celebrate them. But to balance them out a bit, make a few changes to the rest of your menu. Other traditional favorites will be just as good or better when they feature less calories and fat.

Scale Down the Stuffing - To lighten up traditional stuffing (and bonus, make it gluten-free), turn to recipes that use brown rice, barley or quinoa instead of bread cubes. If you want to add sausage, use turkey sausage for $\frac{1}{3}$ the fat of pork sausage. Substitute chopped carrots, parsnips, apples, leeks or butternut squash for some of the bread cubes for a healthier twist.

Simplify the Sweet Potatoes - Sweet potatoes already have sweet in the name, right? No marshmallows needed. Let that natural sweetness shine and bake the sweet potatoes whole. Use the red skinned, orange on the inside sweet potatoes, as they bake up especially tender. Split them open and scoop out the cooked potato, and you'll find that they're practically mashed already. Mix well with a little grated ginger and lightly sautéed garlic. Delicious! Butternut squash can be baked and mashed for the same festive color and even fewer calories and carbs.

Naturally Sweeten the Cranberry Sauce - Adding pureed banana, pineapple or chopped apples to your homemade cranberry sauce means you can add much less sugar.

Minimize the Mashed Potatoes - Replace the butter and milk with plain greek yogurt and chicken or vegetable broth when making mashed potatoes.

Pour the Pumpkin - Make crustless dessert by pouring traditional pumpkin filling into small ramekins and baking for fewer calories and fat. Top with a sprinkle of crushed pecans for a little crunchiness.
