Saint Paul Heritage Preservation

Saint Paul has a wealth of historic resources that define the character of the city, create a strong sense of place, enhance the quality of life of residents, and connect residents to the city. Like many great American cities, Saint Paul has embraced historic preservation as an important tool for maintaining cultural, economic, and social vitality.

Historic preservation is the visual and tangible conservation of cultural identity and an effective method of environmental sustainability. It represents a commitment to remembering the past and demonstrates long-term vision by preserving irreplaceable cultural resources.

Historic districts do have aesthetic stipulations, but they are intended to help ensure that the character of the district remains intact. The stability provided by the preservation program usually raises property values because investors can be assured that the historic nature of the district will remain intact.

What is the Heritage Preservation Commission?

The Saint Paul Heritage Preservation Commission (HPC) was created in 1976. The thirteen-citizen board, appointed by the Mayor, is charged with protecting the city's historic resources. The duties of the HPC include evaluating the architectural and historical significance of buildings and districts, recommending buildings and districts to the city council for designation, and reviewing proposed alterations to designated properties. The HPC is managed by a professional staff in the HP section of the Planning and Economic Development (PED) Office of the City of Saint Paul.

The Heritage Preservation Commission is governed by Saint Paul Legislative Code Title IX: Chapter 73 & 74 and the Saint Paul Comprehensive Plan Heritage & Cultural Preservation Chapter. The HPC conducts business according to theory's prescribed in the Secretary of the Interior's Standards for Treatment of Historic Properties and the National Park Service Preservation Brief's. The HPC and its staff review, and approve or deny, permits for exterior work on designated heritage preservation sites.

What does being part of a local historic district mean?

Local historic district designation is a form of protection for historic properties. Through designation, the City has determined that properties within the district have historical significance and is an important part of the City's heritage worthy of protection from inappropriate changes or destruction.

Do I need approval to work on my property?

Every building within an historic district is protected under the city's heritage preservation ordinance (Legislative Code Chapter 73). If you want to make exterior alterations to your building, you need to obtain approval before beginning the work. Less than 8% of applications require Commission review.

Will historic district designation prevent alterations and new construction? No.

The goal of designation is not to prevent change but guide it. Alterations, demolition, and new construction continue to take place, but the staff must first review the proposed changes for compatibility with the historic character of the district.

Why do you review new construction on vacant lots?

The HPC reviews proposals for new construction to ensure that the new building or structure is consistent with the scale and character of the historic district and will not detract from the special qualities of surrounding buildings.

Do you make me restore my building to the way it looked when built? No.

The HPC does not require you to restore your building to its original appearance. However, if you propose major changes those changes would be reviewed for consistency with the historic character of the building and area.

I want to sell my building within an historic district. Must I tell the Heritage Preservation Commission? No.

Historic district designation places no restrictions on an owner's right to use or to sell property.
