Author Spotlight
R. L. Stine

The author for the month of October is R. L. Stine. He was born Robert Lawrence Stine (R. L.) in Columbus, Ohio on October 8, 1943. Since the age of nine, Stine, had a love for reading and writing. He graduated from Ohio State University in 1965 with a Bachelor of Arts degree. He spent a year teaching junior high school. In 1969 he married, Jane Waldhorn, Stine moved to New York City after his teaching job and took a position as an editor at Scholastic books where he was gainfully employed for 16 years. While at Scholastic his most infamous undertaking was creating a humor magazine, Bananas. However, it wasn't until his job at Scholastic was phased out that he then began writing full time. He shifted gears and began focusing on developing horror classics-his first novel was Blind Date (1986). This was followed by Twisted (1987) and The Baby-Sitter (1989).

Stine is also known for his series writing. The Fear Street series (1989) was for young adults which grew to include 100 novels-selling more than 80 million copies. He also ventured into creating the Goosebumps series which targeted a younger (ages 8-11) audience. Goosebumps became a literary phenomenon and eventually became a television series and later a big screen movie. Stine moved on to another series Nightmare Room in 2000 which featured an on-line component. In 2004 he created Who Let The Ghosts Out? which spurred The Mostly Ghost series. Other notable series include Point Horror (1986) and Rotten School (2005).

Stine's success has spanned over 2 decades-he has sold more than 400 million copies of his children's books. His most distinguished adult books include Superstitious (1995), Eye Candy (2004) and Red Rain (2012). Presently, Stine continues to write at his home in Columbus, Ohio.
