The complete film list for this class is still being developed and revised, it will include films that are rated R or that were produced without a rating for television but that do include brief scenes that might have earned them an R rating if they had been released in theatres. This is because some topics, such as slavery and warfare, both of which will come up in some sections of the class, were brutal events in history and it would be unfair to present them otherwise. When rated R movies are shown, they are not meant simply to shock or to entertain, but because they are the most effective movies available to cover certain sensitive topics. In order to show these movies in class, We need to have this letter granting (or declining) your permission to show rated R movies to your student returned with your signature as soon as possible. If you do not choose for your student to watch rated R films, alternative research assignments will be provided.
