After adjusting for inflation, tax revenue generated for the state's K-12 system in 2015 was roughly 85 percent the amount in 1995, and "no other state is close to a decline of this magnitude," the report's authors said. (Photo: Clarence Tabb Jr., The Detroit News)

Lansing — Michigan would use new online sales tax revenue for road repairs instead of K-12 schools under a $1.3 billion lame-duck supplemental spending plan backed by GOP Gov. Rick Snyder that relies on a funding shift derided by public education groups.

Michigan's Republican-led House approved the spending plan at around 4:45 a.m. Friday, working through the night after approving enabling legislation to reduce the percentage of income tax collections devoted to the School Aid Fund, the main source of state money for K-12 public schools.

The plan would divert $141 million from the School Aid Fund this year and $173.8 million in future years, offsetting additional sales tax collections projected to flow into the fund as the result of a recent Supreme Court ruling on internet commerce.

Michigan has tried to improve schools on the cheap, focusing on more accountability and school choice. To make those policies effective, they have to be matched with adequate funding. We have been kidding ourselves to think we can move forward while cutting funding for schools.

Larry Hogan, Governor
MARYLAND

“ We could have allowed the state to be paralyzed by partisan gridlock. Instead, we have spent the past four years working together to tackle common problems by accepting our shared responsibility to solve them. ”

Larry Hogan, a Republican, is the governor of Maryland.

A shutdown. A standoff. Then a "solution" that means three weeks of waiting and worrying for federal workers just getting back on their feet, who will barely have time to deposit a single paycheck before having to wonder if the next one is coming.

That isn't governing — it's just political theater, and millions of Americans are tired of the drama.
