The Spartan Builders of the Construction II class at North High School constructed a single-family home from the ground up. They will showcase their completed work at the Technical Education Open House on Friday. The public is invited to attend this event.

The Construction Technology I classes will also showcase the sheds they have built during the spring semester. And the technical education department and lab will be open for the public to see.

To build the single-family home, the student construction crew leveled the house foundation, set floor joists, installed flooring, and built walls. On the exterior, they set the truss rafters, sheathed the roof, and applied shingles. On the interior they insulated walls, installed windows and doors, and applied drywall. The final portion of the students' build process was installing interior doors and final trim.

The home was inspected regularly throughout the entire process by both North Dakota and Minnesota inspectors, as the house must meet all building codes and pass all inspections, just as it would if being built by a professional contractor.
