Madeira Students Receive College Board Awards

Madeira High School juniors Ava Henry, Anna Cornejo, Mariana Caceres, Eric Luther, Jon Miguel Lawrence, and Mateo Ramirez Laverde Guzman have each received the National Hispanic Recognition Award through the College Board National Hispanic Recognition Program. Maxwell James and Samuel McClain have been named National African-American Scholars.

More than 180,000 students from all 50 states were eligible to apply for the College Board National Recognition Programs, which grant students with academic honors that can be included on college and scholarship applications. The program was initiated to identify outstanding Hispanic high school students and is one of four College Board National Recognition Programs used to identify academically exceptional students. Names of all students honored are sent to subscribing four-year postsecondary institutions which may give students an opportunity to hear from colleges that are particularly interested in communicating with prospective students of Hispanic heritage. Qualification is based on combined verbal, math, and writing skill scores on the PSAT taken the junior year of high school.
