FOREWORD

Over the pages of this book there will be found a record of "our past school year. Within its covers you will discover traces—some in silhouette, others in bala relief—of your own personal identity. To your notice will come relics of your best affections, tokens and memories of your happiest hours. If this modest first attempt serves to inscribe the past year in your mind if it has succeeded in revealing a living picture of your associations, then it will consider the reason for its being amply justified; then it can stand by the side of its contemporaries with the full realization that it has performed a service. With this in view, LA PALOMA, fledged dove that it is, wings its way out into the world.

DEDICATION

To him, to whose paternal solicitude, clear foresight, and untold sacrifices, Corpus Christi College owes all that it is and has, to him, who by his labors in the founding of this institution has initiated a great work for Catholic Education, to RIGHT REVEREND EMMANUEL B. LEDVINA D. D., Bishop of Corpus Christi, we gratefully dedicate this first volume of our year-book.

The principal aim of education should be to have had the good fortune to be trained by a true, good, and faithful Christian gentleman. Christian fundamentals and high ideals have been set before you during your sojourn at school. It is now that you should develop them in practice. Christ, His life and teachings, should be placed before you as a model. May you be as St. Luke chronicled about the Saviour: "filled with wisdom, and age, and grace with God and men." You must show the value of your education not so much in what it trains you to accomplish, but in what it inspires you to be. Let your endeavor not be "how much?" but "how good?"

Much as we desire that service to the young men benefit to you, simply for your own sakes. For your own sake certainly, we wish it, but not on your account only. Man is not born for himself alone, as the philosopher tells us. You are born for South Texas, and in your advancement, South Texas is advanced. In your advancement in knowledge, in learning, in enlightened attachment to your religion, and character, respectability and social influence, we are contemplating the increase of honor and renown for South Texas.

UPPERCLASSMEN

Upperclass Review

IN turning over the leaves of the Book of Time, in which are set down the records of things dared and done, there is found in that one section devoted to the annals of Corpus Christi College, the record of ten young men, who, by September, 1920, had advanced to the senior high school. Specific mention is found in the records that these upperclassmen had thrown off the drab and frivolous demeanor of the year before and they had, by this date donned a toga virilis, which in school parlance would mean that they had discarded the timidity of freshmen and the haughtiness of sophomores.

Their records in the junior department had been satisfactory. Some of the men had established themselves as distinct personalities in the life of the school. Others had won the confidence of instructors and classmates alike, and were now to be rewarded for their unpishable by assignments to important positions.

In the chapter of accomplishments, as found in the Book of Time, there is mention made of the fact that an upperclassman was editor-in-chief of the school's monthly publication. The editor of the yearbook is found from this circle, likewise. The entire class to have taken the initiative in publishing the first annual, and it is indicated in no uncertain phrase that this small number was responsible for the success of . . . That the spokesman for the students on . . . was selected from this group found mention, and should be recorded here.

. . . class gave its share of sportsmen. The captain of the football team was a member of this group, and responsible positions on other athletic teams fell to the lot of its members. Thus for the Book of Time . . .

The upperclass does not submit a recital of accomplishments in a spirit of boastfulness. The past year has been merely a beginning. It now leaves the circle of the juniorate, prepared to take up more arduous duties next year, and to complete those tasks which it believes to have merely begun in the past.

Sophomore Review

It was a new life that awaited the sophomores when they stepped from the "minim" department into one that permitted them to move in the sphere of the elite. They had been accustomed to the bone rules in the first year, but during this second period those first principles were merely happy recollection. The class was now confronted with mysteries—a deep word, but nevertheless true. And in the conventional sophomoric fashion, the members of the class would not permit themselves to be baffled even by these seemingly unobtainable realities.

First of all, there were mysteries untold in the study of English. For the sure, Clippinger's "blue book" held its cargo of them. They were propounded by Mr. Thomas E. Quigley. We are mindful of the criticism to which we are laying ourselves open by such a reckless use of the word "mystery," but the sophomores mean just what they say. And while this talk revolves about languages, it must be stated that these second year men had already in their first run on school life exhibited a fondness for the study of the classical languages. Wherefore, it is worthy of note that they can boast of a very large Latin class. The rodomontade accounts (that's a good sophomore word!) of Caesar and the Punic Wars were studied under Father Philip.

But still the wonders came. This time they were under the guise of geometry. We were bombarded with the propositions and corollaries of Euclid by Mr. James C. Moore. To our total astonishment we learned that there are more sides to a triangle and more angles to a given surface than the eye was capable of beholding.

The wonders of nature were laid bare to us by Father Joseph in the science class. Who knows but that some future scientist has found his inspiration and his beginning in the class of 1930.

These are the principal subjects that were studied during our sophomore year, some of them for our own sakes, others for testing our acuteness, but surely, all of them for our advancement. In the ensuing year the class hopes to explore new fields and it entertains the hope that it will be able to record additional conquests in the third and junior year shall have come to an end.

The Freshman Diary

Being an Extract from the Class Records

September 15—Fifteen hopeful and expectant freshmen catch their first glimpse of the portly columns of the administration building. The four massive, erect, and secure pillars designate to these beginners the four years of their high school career.

September 17—Football practice begins, which finds a number of first year men falling in line with their older and more seasoned fellows. One of their number, the class president, was later to suffer injuries which incapacitated him for the game for the remainder of the season, and which marred an unusually capable and promising freshman football career.

December 15-77—The days of the first annual retreat. This was something new to most of the Freshmen, but they soon became accustomed to the routine of prayer and meditation. This period shall be considered one of great significance in future life.

January 9—Football sweaters are issued. A number of freshmen are rewarded for their work on the gridiron. In the address of presentation, Coach Quigley was lavish in his praises for the work of these newcomers.

January 10—The work of outlining and planning the school's first annual was begun. It is significant that the upperclassmen saw fit to summon to their aid a member of the first year class.

May 27—End of the final examinations and the close of school. These final tests put a period to a year of hard work much of which was directed by Father Joseph and Father Philip. There is no advance information on the distribution of awards on commencement night, but it is certain that several of these first year men will be found to have been placed on the honor roll, a credit to themselves, and, it is hoped, an inspiration and example to future first year classes.

It was not until the close of the first scholastic year, in 1929, that the students decided to give a record of their activities of the year in print. The monthly publication, The Pilgrim, was brought out in a thirty-two page booklet, resembling an annual in make-up and contents. But the 1930 La Paloma is the first volume of the yearbook proper.

The Pilgrim, spokesman for the students and for the school to the world at large, is about to complete its second volume. Seven issues, of some twenty pages each, shall have appeared by the end of the school year. While at present essentially a news-magazine, The Pilgrim, in its wider vision and scope, was founded to further student literary attempts of every nature, and as such it undoubtedly will appear before another year shall have rolled past.

The Sodality of the Blessed Virgin was canonically erected at the college on December 7 of the current scholastic year. It was immediately affiliated with the mother sodality in Rome. The first class of members was received into the society as full sodalists on March 25, the Feast of the Annunciation.

The unit established at the college is No. 1026 of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade. Its operation lies completely in the hands of the students themselves. Donations were made to the mission cause during the past year. Connected with the general routine work of the society there were occasional social functions to stimulate interest, provide a source of revenue, and to encourage student initiative. All boarding students were enrolled as members.

Retrospect and Prospect

OVER eighty years ago when Corpus Christi was still an outpost on one of America's last frontiers, the John Dunn family, known throughout the length and breadth of South Texas, settled in the newly formed Nueces County. They obtained a site of land some four miles west of Corpus Christi Bay and in close proximity to Nueces Bay, to the south. By industry and by dint of hard labor, Mr. Dunn succeeded in maintaining himself and his family during the difficult times that followed immediately upon the close of the War with Mexico and the Civil War.

The youngest son, who had been named for his father, John Dunn, Jr., fell heir to the property of the family. Being desirous of promoting the common welfare of the community at large, and of perpetuating the memory of his father, he offered to the Right Reverend E. B. Ledvina, Bishop of Corpus Christi, the old homestead, to be given over to a Catholic religious order that would found and conduct an educational institution for boys.

The Right Reverend Bishop succeeded in 1927 in inducing the monastic chapter of New Subiaco Abbey, in Arkansas, to undertake the founding and manning of the contemplated institution. From that time dates the history of Corpus Christi College.

The school opened its doors in 1928 with a particularly gratifying enrollment. Six instructors were engaged for the first year. The State Department of Education recognized the school as a four year high school and placed it on the list of approved high schools. In addition, partial accrediting was earned during this first year.

The second scholastic year opened with an enrollment that was satisfactory. Two instructors were added to the faculty. The equipment, which the State Department of Education had found adequate in its inspection during the foregoing year, was expanded. The school was again commended for its excellent physical plant and for its careful work. Additional credits are being sought, and it is hoped that by the end of the present year accrediting will be nearly completed.

While the school is yet a high school, it is contemplated that sooner or later expansion will permit the addition of college courses. The institution feels that only in this manner can it serve the people and the youth of South Texas adequately, and fulfill the intentions that its founders had in view.

An Acknowledgment

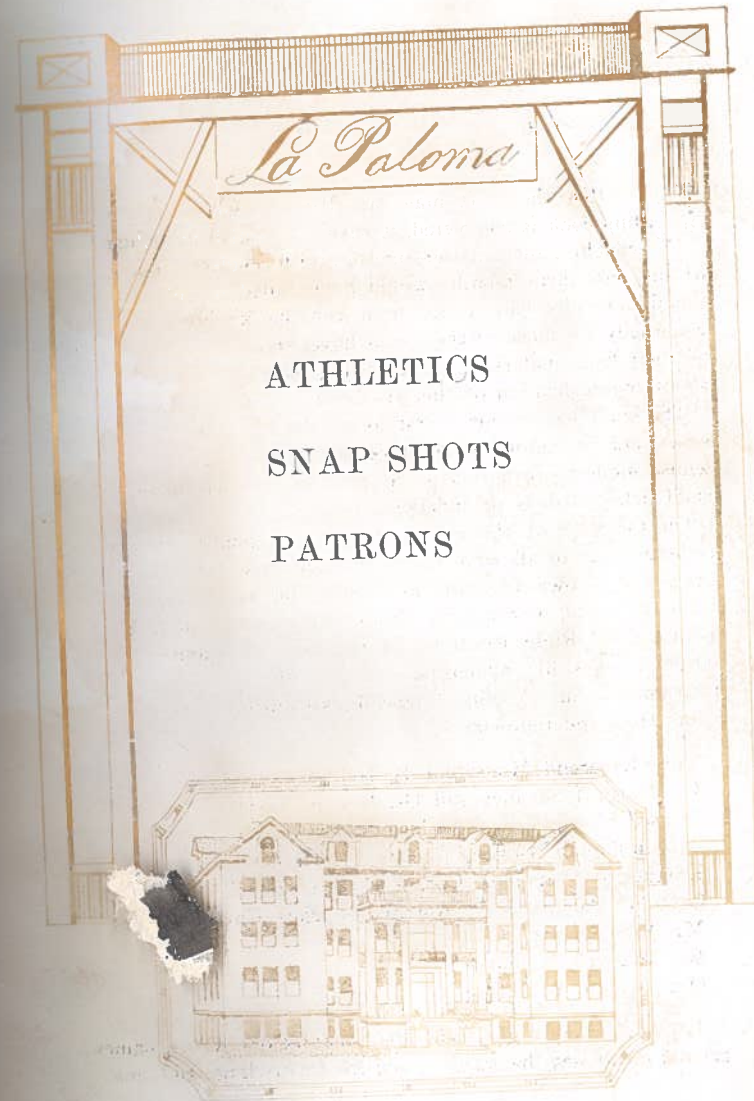

BEFORE the staff may say that its task of compiling this book is completed, it wishes to fulfill an obligation which, it feels, it were ungrateful to neglect. The work of the past three months would have failed to culminate in tangible results had it not been for the kindness and the generosity of those friends who have urged it on, and who by their help, material and otherwise, have aided in bringing about the realization of this yearbook.

The staff has in mind first of all the advertisers, without whose aid La Paloma would have been impossible. To others, whose modesty forbids a public mention of their names, the staff acknowledges its indebtedness.

On the part of the college officials, a public expression is here made to all who in any manner have exhibited their benevolence toward the school during the past year. There come to mind, particularly, Right Reverend Bishop E. B. Ledvina and Right Reverend Monsignor J. J. Lannon. The latter, besides his numerous donations to the school, was instrumental in securing financial assistance to needy students from the following:

Very Reverend Monsignor B. J. Donada;
Dr. Harry J. Heaney and Dr. Jerome Nast;
Blessed Virgin Sodality, Corpus Christi;
Apostleship of Prayer, Corpus Christi Branch;
Knights of Columbus, Corpus Christi Council No. 1202;
Catholic Daughters of America, Corpus Christi Court;
Mr. John Dunn;
Mr. Maxwell P. Dunne;
Mrs. Myron A. Pease.

To all of these and to all other benefactors whose names are not mentioned thanks are given for favors large and small.

ATHLETICS

Football

Basketball

Baseball

To smile in the face of defeat and to persevere in spite of untold difficulties mean much in an athletic director. All of this has Thomas E. Quigley done. He has been battling with a host of problems for the past two years: problems that would have discouraged the ordinary coach to the point of giving up. Quigley is an extraordinary coach. He harbors the conviction that the building of men who are prepared to fight life's battles is the all-important aim of athletics. In all his work he strives to inculcate fair play, courtesy, generosity, and principles of clean sportsmanship, even at the cost of personal prestige. These are the objectives that the coach has kept in view; these constitute the stimulus that has kept him working; this is the reason why he has made sacrifices. And for all of that he has become an inspiration to his charges.

Here's then to the man who can go down in defeat and still live, who can carry on despite the reverses of fortune; here's to Coach Thomas E. Quigley.

The Games

VARIOUS circumstances contributed to the fact that only two games could be played, both of them with Aransas Pass. In the first encounter the Maroons lost by the score of 12-0. Aransas Pass was meeting its sixth set of opponents. A thirty-yard pass in the opening minutes coupled with a cleverly executed sixty-yard run in the same quarter netted the opponents their points. On several occasions the collegians threatened seriously to score, when they succeeded in bringing the ball to the one-yard line. But each time the whistle for the close of the period frustrated any attempt.

The second game was played in the mud of Kieberg Park, in a continual drizzle of rain. The field was slippery and the ball unwieldy. Aransas Pass got the long end of a break in the second quarter, when a fleet Panther sailed by and found his way to the only score of the game. As in the first game, so also on this occasion, the Maroons threatened to score on numerous occasions, but the sogginess of the field cut short any well-directed attempt.

The Football Season

FOOTBALL is played and games are won on reserves. The game is too strenuous event to suppose that it can be carried on with insufficient material; the brunt of the battle cannot be laid upon the shoulders of and borne by a scattered few. If, consequently, the Maroons failed to give an apparent account of themselves in games won, or even in games played, their failure to meet the expectations of the dopesters must be ascribed solely to the lack of material. The handful of men who were industrious in practice, and who assiduously learned the fundamentals that were given them, did show their mettle in the two games in which they participated. They were overpowered in both games by more experienced teams, and had they been given proper support with reserves with whom to drill, and who could be relied upon to furnish assistance when called upon, the outcome of even these two contests might have been in their favor.

But fortune cannot maintain a continued frown; the breaks are sure to reverse sooner or later. This is the reason for the optimism that Coach Quigley is entertaining for the coming season. If the weeks of spring training has caught fire with such who have heretofore taken little interest in football. And the results of this spring grind have been so encouraging that the coach feels capable of meeting an extended schedule in the forthcoming season.

Ten games, the number scheduled, seem to form a pretentious program, and some of these games are with teams that come from the better B class range, including those from institutions that numbered several hundred upon their rolls. In spite of this feeling of attempting too much, and in spite of the optimism, one thing is certain: there will be a different story to chronicle by the end of the last game on November 22, a story that will tell of the beginning of football victories for the school in years to come.

The 1930 Football Schedule

Date	Opponents	Place
September 20	Rockport	Corpus Christi
October 4	Taft	Taft
October 11	Sinton	Corpus Christi
October 18	Falfurrias	Falfurrias
October 25	Aransas Pass	Corpus Christi
November 1	Alice	Corpus Christi (Tentative)
November 8	Kingsville	Corpus Christi (Tentative)
November 15	Mathis	Mathis (Tentative)
November 22	Beeville	Corpus Christi

Basketball

UP to this time, basketball has failed to find its stride at the school. This means that participation in extramural games has been negligible. The sport, however, has found its friends, and within a few years, after the period of development shall have been completed, Coach Quigley's experience and knowledge should become clearly manifest in this sport also.

When the call for the hoop season was issued, shortly after the beginning of December, approximately twenty responded. Conspicuous for their ability on the court were Martin Klockenkemper, Shirley Mireur, Arthur Oreschnigg, Reynaldo Hinajosa, Chris Guzman, and Jay F. Robinson. All of these took part in the first and only game played with an outside team.

The Bisons of Aransas Pass High School furnished the opposition. They easily overpowered and defeated the weak and inexperienced college quint. The season was closed abruptly a short time after this in order to devote the six weeks before the baseball season to football spring training.

A number of class teams were also formed, and daily games between these resulted in developing a few promising players who will be valuable for the future.

Baseball

THUS far, baseball has been restricted to competition with local city teams and with the various classes. Those representing the school in this sport include:

Pitchers: M. Klockenkemper, J. Robinson, H. McCaleb, A. Oreschnigg, J. Clarke, R. Hinajosa.

Catchers: S. Mireur, J. C. Moore, Ch. Guzman.

Infielders: H. Bockholt, E. Missett, D. Martinez, O. Gallagher, E. Bartosch.

Outfielders: W. Bluntzer, R. Hill, R. Wright, G. Walt, J. Weber.

Many of the players are contemplating to play on their home teams this summer, and with this practice it can be safely predicted that the college will be able to place a representative team on the field in the future.
