The NFL “Pro” Bowl—This is REALLY Silly!

The 2016 NFL Pro Bowl is on this Sunday, January 31, at 7:00 PM ET, on ESPN live.

This year’s NFL bowl game will feature teams drafted by NFL legends Michael Irvin and Jerry Rice. The Pro Bowl is a game with teams compiled of the best NFL players. The purpose of this game is mainly to build upon players’ resumés. There is not one player in that game who plays like it is a regular season game. No NFL player wants to play too hard and get hurt, so what is the solution? Don’t try!

This is a publicity game to make the NFL money. Everyone playing in the game is out of Super Bowl contention, so they have no reason to be trying harder. There is absolutely no reason to have a game when everyone is going through the motions.

Roger Goodell should consider what used to happen where there were competitions for things like weight lifting, and kicking, or other things like that. Or do what the NBA does, where there are 1st All-Pro teams that are just there, but never played with. NFL should really consider it (like really really.)
