SELF-CARE CORNER BY ELLIE FARRIBA

We celebrated Thanksgiving last week but let's continue to on what we are thankful for and count our many blessings. As we all know, gratitude is a powerful force that can bring about positivity, resilience, and a sense of well-being into our lives. Why not bring that practice into our classrooms to create a culture of thankfulness. Here are a few ideas:

Gratitude Journal: Begin or end each day with a few moments for your students (and you) to write down what they are thankful for. This simple act can set a positive tone for the day.

Gratitude Wall: Choose a designated area in the classroom for an "Appreciation Wall" where students (and you) can post notes of appreciation for each other. It is a great way to foster a sense of togetherness and recognition.

Gratitude Art and Writing: Incorporate gratitude into your writing assignments. Encourage students to write cards, thank-you notes, or poems (and illustrate them) to people for whom they are especially grateful and who mean a lot to them.

Gratitude Challenges: Set weekly gratitude challenges. For example, challenge your students to express their gratitude for someone they appreciate outside of the classroom and then report back on their experiences.

Incorporating gratitude into your classroom can lead to a happier, more positive learning environment, improved relationships, and even enhanced academic performance. So, why not choose one or two and give it a try!
