Celebrate Earth Day, April 22

By Mary Boone

Earth Day is a very special day, it is a day we celebrate our planet, Earth. We should celebrate the earth every day because our planet is important, besides being the only planet we can live on it is our home. On April 22, we should try to think about ways we can take care Earth.

Even though we are trying to do more for our planet, we do have some problems.

Did you know that about 5 billion trees are cut down every year? That is bad, tree leaves and plants produce oxygen that we need to breathe!

Also, there are about 70,000 forest fires that happen every year! That is also very bad for us, forests, and our atmosphere.

Also, people litter a lot. This causes air pollution which is bad for breathing, plus it just looks bad.

Did you know that people have a lot to do with these problems? People litter, cut down trees, and leave campfires out. These things are bad for the earth.

So, stop littering, cutting down trees, and put water on your fires after you are done to make sure you do not start an uncontrolled fire. Keep the earth clean, it is y o u r home.

The I Survived Series of Books are an Interesting Read

By Avery Roden

This book review delves into the "I Survived" series, which are usually about various natural and a few man-made disasters. The series includes narratives of both real disasters and factual accounts of such events. One of my favorite book is I Survived The Great Molasses Flood, 1919, by Lauren Tarshsis. What makes the "I Survived" series exciting to read is how the author blends historical facts with suspenseful storytelling. The books are great for readers of all ages. The best thing about the stories is how strong people are in times of crisis. As you explore more titles in the "I Survived" series, you will go on exciting journeys through history, which gives you appreciation for the courage of those who survived against all odds.

These are the main highlights of the "I Survived" series that I wanted to share.
