Following the performance, Principal Jenna Landero spoke about the school's concerted efforts to celebrate culture, community, family, and education. Oak View's motto is to serve "every student, every day." The school strives to make sure that every student receives the academic, social and emotional needs so that they can be successful in school. This year, Oak View revamped its special education delivery model to emphasize inclusion and increase time spent in the general education classroom. Fifth grade teacher Patti Schraff and education specialist Kim Davis shared their thoughts and experiences regarding the transition to a higher level of inclusion for special education students. While this was an ambitious goal that required a high level of commitment and collaboration between general and special education teachers, the benefits have been tremendous. They summed up their journey by saying "We do what's best for kids."
